

ST PETER

HIS NAME AND HIS OFFICE

— WITH A PREFACE BY —

THOMAS WILLIAM ALLIES K.C.S.G.

Division BX1805

Section A43

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2019 with funding from Princeton Theological Seminary Library

ST. PETER
HIS NAME AND HIS OFFICE

ST PETER

HIS NAME AND HIS OFFICE

————— WITH A PREFACE BY —————

THOMAS WILLIAM ALLIES, K.C.S.G.

P. J. KENEDY AND SONS
44 BARCLAY STREET, NEW YORK

1 9 2 3

NIHIL OBSTAT :
F. THOMAS BERGH, O.S.B.,
Censor deputatus.

IMPRIMATUR :
EDM. CAN. SURMONT,
Vicarius generalis.

WESTMONASTERII,
16 Julii, 1923.

Made and Printed in England

PREFACE

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY DRAWN UP BY THOMAS WILLIAM ALLIES IN 1878.

THOMAS WILLIAM ALLIES. I was born February 12, 1813, in a parish of Somersetshire, where my father was then curate in the Anglican Church. He was of a family originally seated at Northfield in Worcester-shire, where in deeds of 1368 it is mentioned, and where a considerable extent of land is still called by the name Allies. My father afterwards lived at Bristol and Clifton. I went to the Grammar School of Bristol, but left it in 1826, and by my own choice was sent to Eton in April, 1827, when just fourteen. I only stayed there two years, having gone up to Oxford in June, 1828, to try for a scholarship at Wadham College, which I succeeded in obtaining. Though I returned to Eton, yet as I was matriculated in November, 1828, at Oxford, this necessitated my going into residence in the following spring. In that year the Duke of Newcastle had founded an annual scholarship for Eton College, the first trial for which came on in March, 1829. I was fortunate enough to obtain this scholarship, and so began my life at Oxford in April, 1829. I took my degree in 1832, gaining a first class in classics, but not going in for mathematics. During this period of four years I was contemporary with Gladstone, whom I had known also at Eton, with Manning, Lord Elgin—then Mr. Bruce, afterwards Governor-General of India—Lord Selborne, etc. Hearing Gladstone speak at the Union in 1831, I set him down in my thoughts as a future Prime Minister of England; and I was equally sure that Mr. Roundell Palmer would become Lord Chancellor. I lived to see both these youthful prophecies fulfilled after forty years. Thus I took my degree and class before I was twenty years of age; but I have always since felt how great a disadvantage it was to compete at Oxford at sixteen with men who were generally eighteen or nineteen at the beginning of their academic career. After I had succeeded to a Fellowship at Wadham College in 1833, I went abroad to France and Italy and did not return until the end of 1836, bearing with me the most ardent love for Italy, with the language of which I was then as familiar as with my own. In 1837 I determined to take Orders in the Anglican Church, not having the least doubt that it was part of the Catholic Church. In December, 1837, I was ordained Deacon, and in December, 1838, Priest in the Anglican Church, both upon my Fellowship as title; and from the former date my serious life begins. When I went to Oxford in the autumn of 1837 to prepare for Orders, I found the whole atmosphere full of Dr. Newman and his party. My friend, Mr. Ward, the present editor of the Dublin Review (in 1878), in answer to my question where I should find what Puseyism meant, directed me to a work of Newman just then published, "The Prophetical Office of the Church viewed relatively to Romanism and Popular Protestantism." I read it, and from that time forth lived more and more upon Newman's mind. I had been ordained without the slightest instruction in theology, as at that time candidates for Orders were dispensed from attending Dr. Hampden's lectures, who was under suspicion of heterodoxy. Newman became my theologian. I read his sermons, and his thoughts, together with the language in which he clothed them, exercised an ever-increasing influence upon me. I can never remember a time when I did not believe in the Catholic Church—that is, one community springing from the Day of Pentecost, and lasting to the Day of Judgement. That faith was a gift of God, anterior to any self-introspection which I can call up. But from the time I set myself to know where and what this Catholic Church was, until I had the happiness to enter into it, passed a period of thirteen years, during which I can see now, on looking back, that I was in a state of perpetual search. The steps are as follows: I came to London in 1838, and had as private pupils the sons of the Lord Chancellor Cottenham, and of three puisne Judges, Alderson, Coleridge, and Erskine. In 1840, the first of these, Alderson, a man of extraordinary ability, who was Senior Wrangler in his day, recommended me to Dr. Blomfield, Bishop of London, and I became his examining Chaplain in May, 1840. As such I presented the candidates to him for five general ordinations from June, 1840, to June, 1842; but then my Chaplaincy came to an abrupt termination. In January, 1842, the Bishop had gone to the baptism of the Prince of Wales, and when I saw him on his return, mentioned that the King of Prussia had been one of the godfathers. This deeply offended my Church principles, that a Prussian Protestant who was outside the Church should be admitted as godfather. With more sincerity than prudence I stated my scruple to the Bishop, who had been a party consenting, and was not a little nettled at this remark of his Chaplain. For he wanted, as he told me afterwards, "Moderate Oxford," but this was immoderate with a vengeance. He was the Bishop, it may be remembered, who attempted to satisfy both parties in his diocese by recommending that the clergy should preach in their surplices. A few days afterwards the Bishop said to me that he proposed to give me the living of Launton in Oxfordshire. "I advise you to take it," he said, "because I can give it you now, whereas later on I may feel unable to give you a living." I was grievously vexed at the prospect of going into the country: for I greatly preferred and enjoyed my position as his Chaplain. But there was no help for it, so I took Launton with a capital house and £600 a year: but with a very boorish ignorant population of about the same number of souls. I had married in 1840, and went thither in June, 1842, where I remained until I resigned in September, 1850. As a preparation for a country parsonage I bought St Augustine and most of the Fathers in the old Benedictine edition: and during these eight years I fed upon Newman and them. It was not long before I discovered that nothing in the world could be more different from "the Church of the Fathers" than the Established Church of England. I learnt bit by bit the sacramental system for myself. It was a day never to be forgotten when I ascertained for myself from St Augustine that he worshipped the Eucharist.

Another time I learned from a sermon published by one who is still at this moment a Bishop in the Episcopal Church of Scotland, Dr. Wordsworth, that confession of sins was required in the Church of the Fathers in order to obtain their pardon, and I utilized this by going to confession to Dr. Newman, who had then withdrawn to Littlemore, and I made him a general confession of my whole life, and continued afterwards to go to him at times, until he left the Anglican Church. It was in the spring of 1844 that I thus went to him. I set up the daily morning and evening service in my church and early Communion. In 1844 I published a volume of sermons on the Epistle to the Romans and other subjects, when my faith in the Church of England was still unshaken.

In 1844 I restored my little church at a great expense, and I remarked that from the time it was reopened after restoration I never had an hour of peace in the Church of England. In the year 1845 Fr. Newman became a Catholic, and on the eve of his reception wrote to me informing me of the step he was about to take. Much as I had revered him, greatly as I felt I had gained from him, and though I loved him as much after he had left us as before, I did not blindly follow him. I waited for his work on development, and when it came, I fixed upon a page and a half describing the Primacy of St Peter and of the Popes, as it was exhibited in the first three centuries. I said, I will test these statements. The question of the Primacy includes the whole question between the Church of England and the Church of Rome. I will follow this subject faithfully to its issue, and wherever it leads me I will go, and I remember that I thought to myself, Abraham's sacrifice of his son Isaac was certainly not greater than it would be to me to quit the Church of England. That was in October, 1845, and it cost me five years of prayer and study before the question which I had chosen to determine the controversy landed me safely on the Rock of Peter. What I went through in those five years no words of mine can express. The ever-increasing anxiety, the direction of all thoughts and studies to one point, the connection of the conclusion to be come to with my temporal fortunes, and the welfare of my wife and children, the wish to be certain, the fear of being deceived, of being warped one way by worldly interests, or hurried another by impatience, all these formed a trial which to look back upon at almost a generation's distance fills me with horror. I feel like the man who rode his horse over a bridge of boats one night, and when he saw what he had done the next day, died of fright. The first fruit of my examination of the question of the Primacy was a work intended originally to be an article in the Christian Remembrancer but which speedily passed the size of an article and came out in 1846 as "The Church of England cleared from the Charge of Schism upon Testimonies of Councils and Fathers of the First Six Centuries," an octavo of 204 pages. In this I attempted to state honestly all the passages I could find in favour of St Peter's Primacy as inherited by the Popes, and also all the passages which seemed to me to impugn it. The result was that I admitted fully a Primacy of divine institution, while I defended my communion on the ground that the Primacy had been stretched to a Supremacy, whereas Anglicanism was an appeal to the former against the latter. But my own mind was anything but cleared by this book, for I went on reading and thinking until in less than two years came out a fresh edition in 1848, extended to more than 500 pages, with the result, however, to my own mind that I was made thoroughly unhappy by the thought that my process of defending the Church of England left no Catholic Church at all. I had in this interval thrice gone abroad for the summer vacation, in 1845, in 1847, and 1848, and on all these three occasions I sought every opportunity of seeing Catholics, conversing with them, examining the great works of charity in Paris and elsewhere, and trying to understand Catholic worship, especially the cultus of the Blessed Virgin, which latter soon became to me an attraction. The result of these visits abroad was summed up in a work published in 1849 with the title of "Journal in France in 1845 and 1848 with Letters from Italy in 1847, of Things and Persons concerning the Church and Education." In this volume I most honestly and conscientiously, as it seemed to me, in my earnest search after truth, contrasted Catholicism, as I saw it in action, with that utter want of discipline and dogma which I saw all around me in the Church of England, and which made my life bitterness itself. This work, written by a beneficed clergyman of the Church of England to the honour of the Church of Rome, made a clatter in the papers, and so angered my Bishop, Dr. Samuel Wilberforce, that he threatened to begin proceedings against me for it in the Ecclesiastical Court. A council of friends of both sides, among whom were the present Archdeacon Manning, Dr. Pusey, and Baron Alderson, succeeded in stopping the prosecution. I believe the Bishop desisted because he found that any sentence which struck me would likewise strike not only his brother, H. W. Wilberforce, but also his brother-in-law, the then Archdeacon, afterwards Cardinal, Manning. The storm, therefore, blew over, and I consoled myself by going to Rome in the summer of 1849, when I obtained an audience of the Holy Father at Gaeta in which he heard my story and gave me his blessing. The next spring, 1850, brought the Gorham Decision. I had, in the meantime, become very uncomfortable. To quiet me Dr. Pusey had set me to do a work on the Eucharist; and I was busily studying the "Summa" of St Thomas and the dissertations of Suarez about it. I found to my great delight that the explanation of the Real Presence in the doctrine of Transubstantiation given by St Thomas was the most spiritual that I had ever met with, seeming to me to harmonize the doctrine, practice, and worship of the Fathers. I had conceived the profoundest veneration for the Catholic priesthood since I had come to the knowledge that Mass was offered daily by priests: for though I had lived six months together at Rome in my youth, I had not learned so much as that; my time for visiting churches being then late in the day. I was busily engaged in this work on the Eucharist, when suddenly, I know not how or why, my eyes fell in Gibson's Codex upon the Act of Parliament in Henry VIII's reign, transferring to the Crown the Papal Supremacy. Is this really so, I said to myself. Dr. Pusey always has told me—he had become my confessor after Newman left us—that the power of the Crown over the Church was an usurpation, but this act makes it the foundation-stone, the beginning of the separate existence of the Church of England. The more I looked the more certain it seemed. In the few days that followed I betook myself eagerly to the work of Suarez, "De Erroribus Sectæ Anglicanæ," and the result was a pamphlet on the "Royal Supremacy viewed in Reference to the Two Spiritual Powers of Order and Jurisdiction." I sent this to my chief friends, but I found that not one of them would grapple with the argument. Neither Dr. Pusey nor Archdeacon Manning, nor Judges Alderson and Coleridge, nor Archdeacon Wilberforce, nor anyone else publicly or privately, would meet my authorities and say, "You have mistaken the Royal Supremacy and the Act of Parliament." But I found a general disposition to ignore my pamphlet as ill-timed and uncomfortable. It came out just after the Gorham decision. That wonderful decision laid down the law of the Church of England concerning Baptismal Regeneration to be, that those of her ministers who believed it might continue to believe it and to preach it, and those who disbelieved it might continue to disbelieve it and to preach their disbelief of it. A community which came to such a decision concerning the point which implies the acceptance on the one hand or the rejection on the other of the whole sacramental system seemed to me only worthy to be spat upon. From that time forth I never hated or despised anything as I did the Church of England. But I waited to see if anybody in her would repudiate the judgement. No such repudiation came. None has ever come. Her Convocation has since repeatedly met, but that decision has never been touched. The Gorham decision had, moreover, a positive effect on my own view of the great question about the Primacy. It made it clear to me as the day that the point was not whether a Primacy had become a Supremacy, but whether the Crown or the Church was to rule in things spiritual. That the Church was the Kingdom of Christ I had never doubted; and as little that He had set over His Church not earthly sovereigns, but St Peter and the College of Apostles. In the autumn of that year I set myself to make a reply to my own book which I had called a defence of the Church of England. It was entitled "The See of St Peter, the Rock of the Church, the Source of Jurisdiction, and the Centre of Unity." I waited till it was ready and then abjured the Anglican heresies and was received into the Church by Fr. Newman, September 11, 1850.

The reflection which I would make on all the preceding history is that no man among us, not even Fr. Newman, was born after a more laborious travail, so far as years of anxiety and inward struggle are implied in that expression. It is my joy to add that no one can have felt more peace and satisfaction in the truth of the Catholic Church than I have felt in the twenty-seven years which have since elapsed. Most converts in England could supply another chapter to Fr. Newman's story of "Loss and Gain." Certainly I could. But this is not the place for it. I will only say that at thirty-seven it was difficult to locate oneself afresh in an extremely busy and crowded world. If Masters of Arts do not sweep the roads in London, as they are said to do at Melbourne, there is at least no more helpless two-legged animal than an ex-parson with wife and children, who has become a Catholic. The ἔργον which I had so passionately followed for thirteen years was gone. I felt of about as much value or weight in the world as a piece of sea-weed tossed by the surge high above the water line. I may briefly note what I have done since as an author. In 1852 I published "St Peter, His Name and His Office," drawn partially from Passaglia's work. In 1853 Fr. Newman, then Rector of the Catholic University at Dublin, proposed to me to become Lecturer on the Philosophy of History there. I delivered an inaugural Lecture on the subject in December, 1854. The work called the "Formation of Christendom," of which three volumes have successively appeared in 1865, 1869, and 1875, was originally intended to form part of a course on the Philosophy of History, and to be delivered at Dublin; but when the first volume was ready the author found that no need of lectures on that subject had been felt at the University, and the work has appeared independently of it. It would require at least three volumes more to complete the author's design, dependent, of course, upon the time, health, and leisure granted by Almighty God. I should add, in 1865 Dr. Pusey published what he termed an Eirenicon, the character of which may best be described by Fr. Newman's question to him, "Why did you discharge your olive branch from a catapult?" In this work Dr. Pusey, inter alia, attacked my conclusions upon the Papacy as not being trustworthy, for, he said, so long as I was led by the sole motive of seeking the truth, I came to a conclusion adverse to the Papal Supremacy. I answered this imputation in a letter to Dr. Pusey in 1865, and further in 1866 I wrote a work of 130 pages entitled "Dr. Pusey and the Ancient Church," the drift of which was to demonstrate by the testimony of St Augustine and all the Fathers down to the Council of Chalcedon that the possession of the Priesthood and of the Apostolical Succession was no defence against the charge of Schism and Heresy. This work I consider to have completed my answer to my former work in defence of the Anglican Church. Those to whom it was directed have always carefully ignored it: and Dr. Pusey especially never acknowledged even the receipt of the copy which I sent to him: as neither did he acknowledge the letter in which I answered his imputation of motives. I have likewise since August, 1853, been Secretary of the Catholic Poor School Committee for Great Britain, and as such have been greatly interested in the promotion of Primary Education. Of the life hitherto sketched I sum up the whole in the words: Misericordias Domini in æternum cantabo.

LONDON,
January 30, 1878.

CONTENTS

CHAPTER	PAGE
I. THE NAME OF PETER PROMISED, CONFERRED, AND EXPLAINED - - - -	I
II. EDUCATION AND FINAL DESIGNATION OF PETER TO BE THE RULER WHO SHOULD CONFIRM HIS BRETHREN - - - -	33
III. THE INVESTITURE OF PETER - - - -	72
IV. THE CORRESPONDENCE AND EQUIVALENCE OF THE GREAT TEXTS CONCERNING PETER -	94
V. ST PETER'S PRIMACY AS EXHIBITED IN THE ACTS - - - - -	127
VI. TESTIMONY OF ST PAUL TO ST PETER'S PRIMACY - - - - -	177
VII. ST PETER'S PRIMACY INVOLVED IN THE FOUR- FOLD UNITY OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM -	199
VIII. SUMMARY OF PROOF GIVEN FOR ST PETER'S PRIMACY - - - - -	223
IX. PETRUS DE PETRA - - - - -	274
INDEX - - - - -	289

ST PETER: HIS NAME AND HIS OFFICE

CHAPTER I

THE NAME OF PETER PROMISED, CONFERRED, AND EXPLAINED

OUR Lord tells us that he came upon earth to “ finish a work ”; and he likewise tells us what that work was, the setting up a living society of men, who should dwell in him and he in them; on whom his Spirit should rest, with whom his presence should abide, until the consummation of all things. For the evening before his Passion, “ lifting up his eyes to heaven, he said, Father, the hour is come. . . . I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. . . . I have manifested thy name to the men whom thou hast given me out of the world. Thine they were, and to me thou gavest them; and they have kept thy word. . . . Holy Father, keep them in thy name, whom thou hast given me; that they may be one, as we also are. While I was with them, I kept them in thy name. . . . And now I come to thee. . . . I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from evil. . . . As thou hast sent me into the world, I also have sent them into the world. And for them do I sanctify myself, that they also may be sanctified in truth. And not for them only do I pray, but for those also who through their word shall believe in me; that they all may be one, as thou, Father, in me, and I in thee; that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou hast given to me, I have given to them, that they may be one, as we also are one. I in them, and thou in me; that they may be made perfect in one; and the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them as thou hast loved me. . . . And I have made known thy name to them, and will make it known; that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them.”¹

Thus, the Eternal Word declares to us that the fruit of his Incarnation, the “ finished work ” which his Father had given him to do, was the establishment of a society whose unity in “ truth ” and “ love ” should be so perfect, that he exemplifies it by the indwelling in each other of the Divine Persons. This society was to be perpetual and visible for ever, so that the world by it and in it should recognize his own mission, and believe in the sender. So the dowry of this society, thus perpetually visible, was to be the equally perpetual possession of truth—the revelation of God’s will—and of love, which is conformity to it. And he based these unexampled promises on no less a guarantee than the almighty power and ineffable goodness of his Father, witnessed by his own dwelling amongst us in our flesh.

¹ John xvii.

Elsewhere he termed this society his Church, declared that he would “build it on a rock, and that the gates of hell should not prevail against it.”¹

He told those whom he had set over it to go forth in his name and “to teach all nations whatsoever he had commanded them,” adding the solemn engagement on his own part, “Behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world.”²

His whole teaching is full of reference to it, setting forth its nature with every variety of illustration, enfolding it, as it were, with an exuberance of divine charity.

But two conceptions run through every illustration, and are involved in its primary idea, nay, as this was the finished work of his Incarnation, so are they found in his adorable person from which his work springs. These conceptions are unity and visibility.

As the mystery of the Incarnation consists in the union of the divine and human natures in one Person, and in the assumption of a body—that is, matter by the one uncreated, incomprehensible, and invisible Being, whereby he becomes visible—so unity and visibility are the unfailing marks of his Church, and enter into every image of it, in such a manner that without them the image loses its point and significancy.

Accordingly he proclaims the Church which he was founding to be “the Kingdom of God,” and “the Kingdom of Heaven,” thus bringing before us the conceptions of order, government, power, headship on the one hand, dependence on the other, and a host of mutual relations between the Sovereign and the people, significantly remarking that "a kingdom which is divided against itself must fall." Now a kingdom without unity is a contradiction in terms, and a kingdom of God on earth, which cannot be seen, would be for spirits and not for men.

¹ Matt. xvi 18.

² Matt. xxviii 19, 20.

So he calls it a "city seated on a mountain," which "cannot be hid"; answering to his prophet's words, "the city of the great King," "his rest, and his habitation for ever."¹ Here again are embodied the notions of order, government, conspicuous majesty, impregnable strength.

Thus he inspires his apostle to call it "the house of God, the pillar and ground of the truth."² The house must have its head, the family their father; the knowledge of that father's will is the truth which rests upon the family as its support and pillar. Outside the family that knowledge may be lost, together with the will to obey the father and to love him; but within it is a living tradition, "familiar to the ear as household words." As long as the Master and the Father is there, a perpetual light from his face is there too upon his children and his servants. Divide the house, or corrupt its internal life, and the idea of the house is destroyed; while an invisible house is an absurdity.

Again, the Lord, calling himself "the Good Shepherd, who giveth his life for the sheep,"³ terms his Church the sheep-fold, and declares that as there is one Shepherd, so there must be one fold.

But, rising yet in nearness to the Divine Person

¹ Matt. v 14; Ps. xlvii 2; cxxxix 13, 14.

² 1 Tim. iii 15

³ John x 11-16.

of the Word Incarnate, from whose side sleeping on the cross she is moulded, the Church is called his spouse, as united to him in eternal wedlock, "a great sacrament," or mystery; and even yet more, his body, as supported by the continual influx of her Head; and all her members are called "flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bones."¹

It is evident, then, that in these promises and illustrations are set forth, as belonging to their object, a visible unity, a perpetual possession and maintenance of the truth, and the closest union with God, founded upon a most supernatural indwelling of the Godhead in a society of men on earth, the founding of which was the "finished work" of God the Word Incarnate. Were these promises to fail in any respect—which is utterly impossible, for while heaven and earth shall pass away, no word of their Maker can pass away—it is plain that our ground for trusting in any promises of Holy Writ whatsoever would be demolished. The whole Christian revelation rests on the imperishable life of the Church; because the corruption or division of the Church would falsify the written records of our faith, in which, after the doctrine of the Blessed Trinity, and the Godhead of our Lord, no truth is so deeply imbedded as the perpetual existence and office of the Church.

We have seen the idea of King, Lord, Master, Father, Shepherd, Husband, and Head, running through the delineation of the Church. And no society is complete without its ruler. Such was our Lord, while on earth—the visible ruler of a visible

¹ Eph. v 32, 30.

Church. "While I was with them, I kept them in thy name." He went forth from his baptism to win souls. The water became wine in his presence. He bade men follow him, and they followed. Power went forth from him and healed diseases. Grace flowed from his lips and conquered hearts. An innumerable multitude surrounded him, of all ages and conditions. "And going up into a mountain, he called unto him whom he would himself; and they came to him. And he made that twelve should be with him, and that he might send them to preach."¹

Here, then, the true Israel chooses the future princes of his house, who should sit with him on thrones, judging the twelve tribes. Already, while yet with his Church, he is preparing for her future government, when his visible presence shall be taken from her. In three years all shall be accomplished, but when "the covenant should have been confirmed with many in one week, and in the half of the week the victim and the sacrifice should fail";² when his Apostles should see him no longer; was any one ordained to take that all-important place of supreme ruler which he had filled? For upon earth he had been in two relations to his Church: her Founder, and her Ruler. The former office belonged to his single Person; in its nature it could not pass to another; the work was finished once and for ever. But the latter office was, in its nature, likewise perpetual. How, then, should the charge of visible ruler, as man among men, be executed, when his Person was withdrawn, when he ascended up on high, when all power in heaven and earth was indeed given into his hands, and so the headship of spiritual influence and providential care? Then, indeed, that sacred Body was withdrawn into the tabernacle of God, and the Bridegroom was taken away for a time, and the voice and visible presence, “ what they had seen, and heard, and handled, of the word of life,”¹ “ was with them and kept them ” no longer. Should his Church, which had been under one visible ruler from the beginning, now have her government changed? Or had he marked out any one among the Twelve to succeed to his own office of visible headship, and to be “ the greater,” and “ the ruler ”² among his brethren, his own special representative and vicar?

¹ Mark iii 13.

² Dan. iv 26.

To answer this question, we must carefully observe and distinguish what is said and what is given to the Apostles in common, and what to any one of their number in particular; the former will instruct us as to their equality, the latter as to the pre-eminence which any one enjoyed over the rest, and in what it consisted.

Just, then, as at a certain period of his ministry, our Lord, out of the multitude who followed him, selected twelve to be his special attendants upon earth, and, when he should be taken up, to be the heralds of his Gospel among all nations: so out of the twelve he from the beginning distinguished one, marked him out for a peculiar and singular office, connected him with himself in a special manner, and having after through the whole of his ministry given him tokens and intimations of his future destination, at last expressly nominated him to take his own place, and preside among his brethren. His dealing with this Apostle forms one connected whole, in which there is nothing abrupt or inharmonious, out of keeping, or opposed to what he said to others. What is at first obscurely intimated is afterwards expressly promised, again in fresh terms corroborated, and at last, in yet other language, but of the like force, most significantly conveyed,¹ while it is attested by a number of incidental notices scattered through the whole Gospel history. Thus² it becomes necessary to consider each particular, as well as the whole sum of things said, proper and peculiar to this Apostle; to weigh first their separate and then their joint force, and only at last to form a united judgement upon all.

¹ 1 John i 1.

² Luke xxii 26.

We are searching into the will of the divine Founder of our faith, which he has not only communicated to his Church in a living tradition, but in this case likewise ordered to be set forth in authentic written documents. These alone we are here considering, and the point in question is whether he decreed that all the Twelve should share equally in that divine mission and authority which he had received from the Father, or whether, while bestowing on them all very high and distinctive powers, he yet appointed one, namely Simon, the son of Jonas, to preside over the rest in his own place. We have, then, to consider all in these documents which is said peculiar to such Apostle, pointing out singular gifts and prerogatives, and carrying with it special authority of government.

¹ See John i 42; Mark iii 16; Matt. xvi 18; Luke xxii 32; John xxi 15.

² Passaglia, pp. 35-37.

And we must remember that where proofs are numerous and complex, some which in themselves are only probable and accessory, yet have their force on the ultimate result. But this result must be drawn from a general view of the whole, and will collect in one the sum of proof both probable and certain.

Again, where many various causes concur, some more and some less, to produce a certain effect, the force of such effect is the force of all these causes put together, not of each by itself alone. Or where many witnesses are examined, whose evidence differs in value, although the testimony of some be in itself decisive, yet the verdict must be given after a consideration and review of all.

Now, the first mention which we have of the Apostle Simon is full of signification. Our Lord had only just begun his ministry; he had been lately baptized, and as yet had called no disciples. But two of John the Baptist's disciples, hearing their master name Jesus "the Lamb of God," follow him, are kindly received by him, and one of them, being Andrew, Simon's brother, finds Simon, and says to him, "We have found the Messias. And he brought him to Jesus. And Jesus looking on him said, Thou art Simon the son of Jonas; thou shalt be called Cephas, which is interpreted Peter:"¹ as if he would say, By birth thou art Simon, son of John; but another and a higher lot is in store for thee. I will give thee another name which thou shalt bear, a name in itself signifying the place which thou shalt hold in my Church. Thou shalt be called, and thou shalt be, the Rock.

¹ John i 35-42.

For why, when a vast multitude of our Lord's words and actions have been omitted, was this recorded for us, save that a deep meaning lay in it? Or what could that meaning be when our Lord, for the first time looking on Peter, promised to him and to him alone, a new name, and that a name given in prophecy to himself, a name declaring by its very sound that he should be laid by the builder, as a foundation of the structure about to be raised? So in the fourth century St Chrysostom comments on the text, calling him "the foundation of the Church, he that was really Peter" (the Rock) "both in name and in deed"; and a little after St Cyril of Alexandria, "with allusion to the rock he transferred his name to Peter, for upon him he was about to found his Church."¹ The Creator of the world does not give a name for nothing. His word is with power, and does what it expresses. Of old, "He spake and they were made; he commanded and they were created." Now, too, he speaks, at the first dawn of his great spiritual restoration. When as yet nothing has been done, and not a stone of the divine building reared, he who determines the end from the beginning looks upon one who seemed a simple fisherman, and at first beholding him, he takes Simon, the son of Jonas, out of the roll of common men; he marks him for a future design; he wraps him in a prophetic title; he associates him with his own immovable power. Of himself it has been said,² "Behold I will lay a stone in the foundation of Sion, a tried stone, a corner-stone, a precious stone, founded on the foundation. He that believeth, let him not hasten." And again, "The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is wonderful in our eyes." And again, "A stone was cut out of a mountain without hands; and it struck the statue upon the feet thereof that were of iron and clay, and broke them in pieces. But the stone that struck the statue became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." And again, "Behold the stone that I have laid before Jesus: upon one stone there are seven eyes; behold, I will grave the graving thereof, saith the Lord of Hosts; and I will take away the iniquity of that land in one day." In reference to which St Paul said of Christians, that they are "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; in whom all the building, being framed together, groweth up into a holy temple in the Lord." It is plain, then, that our Lord, "both by the Old and New Testament, is called a stone."¹

¹ St Chrysostom on the text. St Cyril in Joan. i 42.

² Isa. xxviii 16; Ps. cxvii 22; Dan. ii 35; Zach. iii 9; Eph. ii 20.

But this which he had of himself, and by virtue of his own divine power, as the Word of God, he would communicate in a degree, and by dependence on himself, to another. This is no modern interpretation, but the very words of St Ambrose: "Great is the grace of Christ, who bestowed almost all his own names on his disciples. I, said he, am the light of the world, and yet he granted to his disciples the very name in which he exulted, by the words, Ye are the light of the world. Christ is the Rock, but yet he did not deny the grace of this name to his disciple, that he should be Peter, because he has from the Rock firm constancy, immovable faith.”¹

¹ Theodoret in Dan. ii 34.

In the third century, Origen, on this very text, observes: “He said he should be called Peter, by allusion to the Rock, which is Christ, that as a man from wisdom is termed wise, and from holiness holy, so too Peter from the Rock.” And in the fifth, St Leo paraphrases the name thus: “While I am the inviolable Rock, the Corner-stone, who make both one, the foundation beside which no one can lay another; yet thou also art the rock, because by my virtue thou art established so as to enjoy by participation the properties which are peculiar to me.”²

Here, then, we have three facts: (1) That our Lord having twelve apostles whom he chose, loved, and honoured, above all his other disciples, yet promised to one only a new name;³ and (2) this a name in the highest degree significative, and most deeply prophetic of a particular office; and (3) a name peculiar to himself, as the immovable foundation of the Church. This happened in the first year of his ministry, before, as it would appear, either Peter or any other Apostle was called.

¹ Ambrose in Luc., lib. 6, n. 97.

² Serm. iv 2.

³ For the name Boanerges, which in one place is given to the two sons of Zebedee, is in the first place a joint name; secondly, it is nowhere else referred to, and does not take the place of their birth-names; thirdly, it indicates not an official dignity, but an inward disposition. We cannot doubt that such a name bestowed on the two brothers was a mark of great distinction, but, for the above reasons, it cannot come into competition with the name of Peter. See Passaglia, p. 44, n. 38.

The promise thus emphatically made to Simon, "Thou shalt be called the Rock," our Lord fulfilled in the second year of his ministry, when he distinguished the twelve Apostles from the rest of his disciples, giving them authority to teach, and power to heal sicknesses and to cast out devils. Then, says St Mark, "to Simon he gave the name of Peter"; and St Matthew, "The names of the twelve apostles are these: the first, Simon, who is called Peter;" and St Luke, "Simon, whom also he named Peter."¹ And by this name he marked him out from amongst all his brethren, and united him to himself. "He changes, too," says Tertullian, "Peter's name from Simon, because also as Creator he altered the names of Abraham, Sara, and Oshua, calling the last Jesus, and adding syllables to the others, but why did he call him Peter? If for the strength of his faith, many solid substances would lend him a name from themselves. Or was it because Christ is both the Rock and the Stone, since we read that he is set for a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence? I omit the rest. And so it was his pleasure to communicate to the dearest of his disciples, in a peculiar manner, a name drawn from the figures of himself, I imagine, as being nearer than one drawn from figures not of himself."²

It is, then, setting a seal on his former acts, drawing out and corroborating their meaning, that he once more, and in the most emphatic way of all, recurs to this name, attaching to it the most signal promises, and establishing its prophetic power. In the third year of his ministry our Lord “ came into the quarters of Cesarea Philippi; and he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that the Son of Man is? But they said, Some John the Baptist, and others Elias, and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets. Jesus saith to them, But whom say ye that I am? Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answering, said to him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar Jona, because flesh and blood hath not revealed it to thee, but my Father who is in heaven. And I say to thee, that thou art Peter; and upon this rock will I build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven. And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound also in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, it shall be loosed also in heaven.”

¹ Mark iii 14; Matt. x 1; Luke vi 14

² Cont. Marcion., l. 4, c. 13.

When we reflect that the first act of our Lord to Peter was to look upon him, and to promise him this name, a token of his omnipotence to Simon yet knowing him not, as that seeing him under the fig-tree was to Nathanael of his omniscience; and that when he chose his twelve Apostles, it is said markedly, “ to Simon he gave the name of Peter,” the force of his reply cannot well be exceeded. The promise of our Lord answers part by part to the confession of his Apostle. The one says, “ Thou art the Christ,” that is, the anointed one; the other, “ Thou art Peter,” that is, the Rock, the name which I gave thee myself: my own title with which I invested thee. The one adds, "The Son of the living God"; the other "And upon this rock I will build my Church," that is, as it is true what thou confessest, that I am "the Son of the living God," so my power as such shall be shown in building my Church upon thee whom I have named the Rock, "and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Not only this, but I will unfold to thee the full meaning of thy name, and declare the gifts which accompany it. "And I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven."¹ It was written of old: These things saith the holy one and the true one, he that hath the key of David; he that openeth and no man shutteth; shutteth and no man openeth." As he gave to thee to share his name of the Rock, so he shall give to thee to bear in his name his own symbol of supreme dominion, the key which opens or shuts the true city of David. All ages shall own thee, all nations acknowledge thee, as The Bearer of the Keys. As long as my Church shall last, against which the gates of hell shall not prevail, thy office shall last too; as long as there are souls to be saved, they shall pass by thy ministry into the gate of the Church. And further, as long as there need in my spiritual kingdom laws to be promulgated, precepts issued, sins forgiven, "whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth, it shall be bound also in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, it shall be loosed also in heaven."

Who, indeed, can adequately express the gifts which the world's Creator and Redeemer here promises to his favoured servant? Thus in the fourth century St Chrysostom labours to set them forth: "See how he raises Peter to a higher opinion of himself; and reveals and shows himself to be the Son of God by these two promises. For what belongs to God alone, to loose sins, and to render the Church immovable in such an assault of waves, and to make a fisherman more solid than any rock, when the whole world was at war with him, these are what he promises to give him; as the Father, addressing Jeremias, said, 'I have made thee an iron pillar and a wall,' but him to one nation, whereas the other to the whole world. Willingly would I ask those who wish to diminish the dignity of the Son, which are the greatest gifts, those which the Father gave to Peter, or those which the Son. For the Father bestowed on Peter the revelation of the Son; but the Son disseminated that of the Father and of himself through the whole world; and put into the hands of a mortal man power over all things in heaven, when he gave the keys to him who extended the Church through the whole world, and showed it to be firmer than the heaven."¹ And not many years later St Leo says, "That which the truth ordered remains; and blessed Peter, persisting in that strength of the rock which he received, has not deserted the guidance, once undertaken, of the Church. For thus was he set before the rest, that while he is called the Rock, while he is declared to be the foundation, while he is appointed the door-keeper of the kingdom of heaven, while he is advanced to be the judge of what shall be bound and what loosed, with the condition that his sentence shall be ratified even in heaven, we might learn through the very mysteries of the names given to him, how he was associated with Christ.”¹ This association passed, indeed, into the very mind of the Church, for among all the titles given by fathers and councils and liturgies to Peter, and expressing his prerogatives, the one contained in this name is the most frequent. Thus he is termed “the rock of the Church,”² “the rock of the Church that was to be built,”³ “underlying the building of the Church,”⁴ “receiving on himself the building of the Church,”⁵ “the immovable rock,”⁶ “the rock which the proud gates of hell prevail not against,”⁷ “the most solid rock,”⁸ “he to whom the Lord granted the participation of his own title, the rock,”⁹ “the foundation second from Christ,”¹⁰ “the great foundation of the Church,”¹¹ “the foundation and basis,”¹² “founding the Church by his firmness,”¹³ “the support of the

¹ Apoc. iii 7.

¹ St Chrys. in Matt. xvi, Hom. 54.

¹ St Leo, Serm. 3.

² Hilary in Matt. xv, n. 6; in Ps. cxxxi, n. 4; de Trin., l. 6, n. 20. Gregory Naz. Orat. 26, p. 453. Ambrose, St Amb. Retract, lib. I, c. 21, St Aug.

³ Tertullian de Monogam., c. 8. Origen in Ps. I, Eusebii, Hist., l. 6, c. 25. Cyprian, Ep. 71, Firmilian, 74.

⁴ Basil cont. Eunom., lib. 2, n. 4. Zeno, lib. 2, tract. 13, n. 2.

⁵ By the same.

⁶ Epiphan. Hær. 59, n. 7.

⁷ Aug. in Ps. cont. par. Donati. Leo, serm. 98.

⁸ Theodoret, ep. 77.

⁹ Maximus of Turin, Serm. pro natali Petri et Pauli.

¹⁰ Greg. Nazian. in Hom. archieratico inserta.

¹¹ Origen in Exod. hom. 5, n. 4.

¹² Gallican Sacramentary, edited by Mabillon, t. i, Mus. Ital., p. 343. Synod of Ephesus, Act 3.

¹³ Peter Chrysologus, serm. 154.

Church,"¹ "the Apostle in whom is the Church's support,"² "the support of the faith,"³ "the pillar of the Church,"⁴ and by an authority sufficient alone to terminate all controversy, the great Council of Chalcedon,⁵ "the rock and foundation of the Catholic Church, and the basis of the orthodox faith."

Thus, then, we have the name of Peter first promised, next conferred, then explained. And further light will be shed on this by the consideration of the purpose for which names in Holy Writ were bestowed by divine command on individuals, or their former names changed.

Now, of names opposed in Scripture there would seem to be three classes. The first and most common are commemorative, and are for the purpose of recording and handing down to posterity remarkable facts. Such are Peleg, "because in his days the earth was divided"; Isaac, from the laughter of his father and mother; Issachar, a reward; Manasses, "God hath made me to forget my labours"; Ephraim, "God hath made me to grow";⁶ and a multitude of others.

The second class may be termed significant, being imposed to distinguish their bearers from others by

¹ Ambrose de Virginitate, c. 16.

² Ambrose in Luc., lib. iv, n. 70.

³ Chrysostom, Hom., tom. iii, p. 4.

⁴ Philip, legate of the Apostolic See, in Act 3 of Council of Ephesus.

⁵ Council of Chalcedon, Act 3.

⁶ Gen. x 25; xvii 19; xxx 18; xli 51, 52.

some quality. Such are Jacob, the supplanter; Esau, Edom, the red; Moses, the taken or saved; Maccabeus; Boanerges.¹

The third and highest class are prophetic, and as such evidently can be imposed by God alone, who foresees the future. They are twofold: (1) Those which fore-signify events concerning not so much their bearers as others: such are Shear-jashub, "the remnant shall return"; Jezrael, "I will visit"; Lo-ruhamah, "not pitied"; Lo-ammi, "not my people." (2) Those which point out the office and destiny of their bearers; such as Noe, rest; Israel, a prince before God; Josue, saviour; Sarah, princess; John, in whom there is grace; and, after the divine name of Jesus, "who saves his people from their sins,"² Abraham, and Cephas, or Peter. These two neither commemorate a past event, nor signify a quality or ornament already possessed, but are wholly prophetic, inasmuch as they shadow out the dignity to which the leaders of the two covenants are divinely marked out by the very imposition of their name.

For it will perhaps bring out the pre-eminence and superior authority of Peter, if we consider the very close remembrance and almost identity of the dispensation into which God entered with Abraham, and that which Christ gave to Peter. But first we must observe how the more remarkable things occurring in the New Testament were foretold by types, images, parallelisms, and distinct prophecies in the Old. How¹ both our Lord, the Evangelists, and the Apostles take pains to point out the close agreement between the two covenants; how the ancient ecclesiastical writers do the like in their contests with early heretics, or in recommending the truth of the Christian faith either to Jew or Gentile. They considered scarcely any proof of the Gospel superior to that which might be drawn by grave and solid inference from the anticipation of Christian truths in the old covenant. Now, among such truths, what concerns Peter is surely of signal importance, as it affects the whole judgement on the form of government which our Lord instituted for his Church.

¹ Gen. xxv 26; xxvii 36; xxv 25; xxv 30; Exod. ii 10; 1 Macc. ii 4; Mark iii 17.

² Isa. vii 3; Os. i 4, 6, 9; Gen. v 29; xxxii 28; Num. xiii 17; Gen. xvii 15; Matt. iii 1.

Again, it may be taken as an axiom that, as a similitude of causes is inferred from a similitude of effects, so a resemblance of the divine counsels may be inferred from a resemblance of exterior manifestations. As effects are so many steps by which we rise to the knowledge and discernment of causes, so divine manifestations are tokens which unfold God's eternal decrees. Thus if the series of dealings which constitute God's dispensation to Abraham be very much like that other series in which the Scriptures of the New Testament set forth the dispensation given to Peter, we may conclude, first, that the two dispensations may be compared; and, secondly, that from their resemblance, a resemblance in the divine purpose may be deduced.

First,² then, " God at sundry times, and in divers manners, speaking to the fathers " of that covenant of grace, into which he had already entered with our first parents, said to Abram, "Go forth out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and out of thy father's house, and I will make of thee a great nation." But when in the last days he began to fulfil that covenant, and to declare his will by his Son, Jesus said to Simon and Andrew, "Follow me, and I will make you to become fishers of men," and to Simon specially, "Fear not, for henceforth thou shalt catch men."¹

¹ Passaglia, p. 51.

² Ibid., p. 52.

Abram hearkened to God calling him: "So Abram went out as the Lord had commanded him"; and Simon as readily obeyed Christ's vocation: "And immediately leaving their nets they followed Him."²

God rewarded Abraham's obedience by the promise of a new name: "Neither shall thy name be called any more Abram, but thou shalt be called Abraham." So Christ honoured Simon, saying, "Thou art Simon, the son of Jonas; thou shalt be called Cephas."³

No sooner had God unfolded the dignity shadowed forth in the promised name, and bestowed that dignity on Abraham, than he required of him a signal instance of faith and love: "God tempted Abraham, and said to him, Take thy son, thine only begotten, whom thou lovest, and offer him for a holocaust." So Christ required of Simon a proof of faith and of superior love before he either unfolded the excellence of the promised name, or adorned him with that excellency: "He saith to them, Whom say ye that

¹ Gen. xii 1; Mark i 16, 17; Luke v 10.

² Gen. xii 4; Mark i 18.

³ Gen. xvii 5; John i 42.

I am ?” “ Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these ?”¹

And both were no less ready to show the fortitude of their faith and love than they had been ready to follow the divine calling. For, “ Abraham stretched forth his hand, and took the sword to sacrifice his son ”; and “ Simon Peter answering, said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God ”; and again, “ Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee.”²

Then, as the bestowal of the new name was the reward of the obedience with which each had followed his vocation, so God, moved by their remarkable ensuing faith and charity, explained the dignity contained in that name, and bestowed it when so explained. The following refers to the explanation: “ By myself have I sworn, because thou hast done this thing,” and “ Because flesh and blood hath not revealed it to thee, but my Father who is in heaven. And I say unto thee.”

But as to the dignity bestowed, it should be remarked that it is divine, and communicated to each with this resemblance: First, that Abraham thereby becomes the source and parent of all the faithful, and Peter their base and foundation; the one, the author of a seed which should equal in number the stars of the heaven and the sand of the sea; the other, the Rock of the Church, which should embrace all nations, tribes, and languages. God says to Abraham, “ And multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven and as the sand which is on the sea-shore.”

¹ Gen. xxii 1; Matt. xvi 15; John xxi 15.

² Gen. xxi 10; Matt. xvi 16; John xxi 15.

But Christ to Peter, “ And upon this rock I will build my Church.” Secondly, the blessing thus bestowed from above upon each was not one which should rest in their single persons, but from them and through them should be extended to the universal posterity and society of the faithful; so that all who should believe to the consummation of time should gain through them blessing, stability, and victory over the assault of enemies and the gates of hell. The promise to Abraham is clear: “ Thy seed shall possess the gate of their enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed ”; nor less so to Peter, “ And the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.”

But the high excellence of this dignity, embracing, as it does, the whole company of the faithful, was presignified in the very meaning of the name imposed. For of Abraham’s name we read, “ And thy name shall be Abraham, for a father of many nations have I made thee.” Exactly resembling is what is said of Peter’s appellation, “ Thou art Peter, the Rock, and upon this rock I will build my church.”

Nay, we may put in parallel columns the two promises, thus—

1. Thy name shall be Abraham.	1. Thou art Peter.
2. For a father of many nations have I made thee.	2. And upon this rock I will build My Church.

And just as in the former the second clause contains the reason of the first, so in the latter likewise the two clauses cohere, as the name and its explanation. Again, the dignity of the one is expressed as that of the Father; of the other as that of the Rock. Further, those alone can share the blessing of Abraham, who are born of his spirit; and those alone the stability divinely granted to Peter, who refuse by any violence, or at any cost, to be separated from him.

But Abraham was thus raised to be the friend of God, associated in the divine Fatherhood, and made the teacher of posterity; and therefore, as being such, God would show him his counsels, that through him they might descend to his children. "And the Lord said, Can I hide from Abraham what I am about to do? for I know that he will command his children and his household after him to keep the way of the Lord." In a precisely similar way, when God would call the Gentiles to the light of the Gospel, he showed it by a special revelation to Peter alone: "There came upon him an ecstasy of mind: and he saw the heaven opened; and this was done thrice." And the reason of so preferring Peter was God's decree, that through him other Christians, even the Apostles themselves, might be informed, and convinced. "You know that in former days God made choice among us that by my mouth the Gentiles should hear the word of the Gospel and believe." "And thou, when thou art converted, confirm thy brethren."¹

Finally, as God pronounces Abraham blest, so Christ pronounces Peter: and as he made Abraham the source and fountain-head of blessing and strength to all others, so no less did Christ make Peter. Of the first we read, "I will bless thee, and will make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing”; of the second, “Blessed art thou, Simon Bar Jona;” and “Upon this rock I will build my Church.”

¹ Gen. xviii 17; Acts x 10; xv 7; Luke xxii 32.

In one word, the parallel is as follows between Abraham and Peter. Both receive a remarkable call, and follow it; both are promised and receive a new, and that a prophetic name; of both signal instances of faith and love are required; both furnish these, and therefore do not lose the increase of their reward. To Abraham his prophetic name is explained, and to Peter likewise; Abraham understands his destination to be the Father of all nations, and Peter that he is made the Rock of the universal Church; Abraham is called blest, and so Peter. To Abraham it is revealed that no one, save from him, and through him, shall share the heavenly blessing; to Peter that all, from him, and through him, shall gain strength and stability. It is only through Abraham that his posterity can promise itself victory over the enemy, and only through being built on Peter, the Rock, that the Church will triumph over the gates of hell. Finally, if Abraham, as the teacher of the faithful, is instructed in the divine counsels with singular care, not less is shown to Peter, whom Christ has made the doctor and teacher of all believers.

The gifts thus bestowed on Abraham and Peter are peculiar, for they are read of no one else in the Holy Scriptures; they are not only gifts, but a reward for singular merit; and in their own nature they cannot be general. As by them Abraham is put into a relation of Fathership, so that all the faithful become his children, so Peter being called and made the rock and Foundation of the Church, all its members have a dependence on him.

And if these gifts are peculiar, no less do they convey a singular dignity and pre-eminence. For it follows that, as St Paul says, all the faithful are children of Abraham,¹ being heirs not of his flesh, but of his spirit and faith; so no one is, or can be, a part of the Church's building, who rests not on Peter as the foundation. For the same God who said to Abraham, "Thy name shall no longer be called Abram, but Abraham shall be thy name," said also to Simon, "Thou shalt not be called Simon, but Cephas"; the same God who said to the former, "In thee shall all families of the earth be blessed," said to the latter, "Upon this Rock I will build my Church."

What is the source of this pre-eminence in both? To both the same objection may be made, and for both the same defence.

How should blessing and adoption be propagated from Abraham, as a sort of head, into the whole body of the faithful? Because Abraham is considered as joined with that mighty Seed his offspring, whence in chief and primarily the salvation of all depends; because Abraham is made by participation partner of that dignity which naturally and substantially belongs to the Seed that was to spring from him. God himself has told us this, and his Apostle St Paul explained it. For as we read that it was said to Abraham, "In thee shall all nations of the earth be blessed," so God himself has told us that in thee, by thee, means in, by thy seed. Hence St Paul: "To Abraham were the promises made, and to his seed. He saith not, seeds, as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ.”¹ So that the divine words, “In thee shall all nations of the earth be blessed,” give this meaning: “As thou shalt give flesh to my only begotten Son whom I cherish in my bosom, whence he shall be called at once ‘the Son of God and the son of Abraham,’² so he makes thee a partner of his dignity and excellence, whence, if not the source and origin, yet thou shalt be a broad stream of blessing to be poured out on all nations.”

¹ Gal. iii 7.

Now, just in the same manner is Peter the Rock of the Church, and the cause next to Christ of that firmness with which the Church shall remain impregnable to the end. For therefore is he the Rock and Foundation of the Church, because he has been called into a sort of unity with him of whom it is said, “Behold, I lay in Sion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious, and he that believeth on it shall not be ashamed”: and in whom, as Paul explains, “the whole building fitly framed together increaseth unto a holy temple in the Lord.”³ Therefore is he the Church’s Rock, because as he, by his own confession, declared the Godhead of the Foundation in chief, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,” so from him, who is the chief and substantial Foundation, he received the gift of being made partner in one and the same property: “And I too say unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church”; one with me by communication of my office and charge, my dignity and excellency. Hence the stability of

¹ Gal. iii 16. ² Matt. i 1. ³ Isa. xxviii 16; Eph. ii 21.

Peter is that of Christ, as the splendour of the ray is that of the sun; Peter's dignity that of Christ, as the river's abundance is the abundance of the fountain. Those who diminish Peter's dignity may well be charged with violating the majesty of Christ; those who are hostile to Peter, and divorced from him, stand in the like opposition to Christ.

Now, this parallel is an answer¹ to those who object to Peter's supereminence as the Foundation, that this dignity is entirely divine, surpassing by an almost infinite degree the capacity of man. For is not that a divine dignity which consists in the paternity of all the faithful? Is not that prerogative beyond man's capacity by which one becomes the author of a blessing diffused through all nations? Yet no one denies that such a dignity and such a prerogative were granted to Abraham. In divine endowments, therefore, their full and natural possession must be carefully distinguished from their limited and analogous participation. The one, as inherent, cannot fall to the creature's lot; the other as transferable, may be granted as God pleases. For what further removed from man than the Godhead? Yet it is written, "I have said, Ye are gods."²

Not weightier is the other objection, that the office of being the Foundation is too important to be entrusted to human care. Was there less difficulty in blessing being diffused from one man among all nations? Rather we must look on man not as he is by, and of, himself, apart from God, and left to his own weakness, but as upborne by divine power, according to the promise, "Behold, I am with you all days, until the consummation of the world." Who can doubt that man, in union with God, may serve for a foundation, and discharge those offices in which the unity of a structure consists? It is confidently and constantly objected, that "other foundation no man can lay besides that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ."¹ As if what has been laid by Christ himself, and consists in the virtue of Christ alone, can be thought other than Christ; or as if it were unusual, or unscriptural, for things proper to Christ to be participated by men. Therefore the chief difficulties against Peter's pre-eminence, and character as the Foundation, seem to spring from the mind failing to realize the supernatural order instituted by God, and the perpetual presence of Christ watching over his Church.

¹ Passaglia, p. 58.

² Ps. lxxxii 6, with John x 34.

Thus it is no derogation to Abraham's being the Father of the faithful, or to the hierarchy of the Church instituted by Christ himself, that our Lord says, "Call none your father upon earth, for one is your Father who is in heaven";² inasmuch as Scripture abundantly proves that divine gifts are richly conferred upon men. What more divine than the Holy Spirit? Yet it is written, "And I will ask the Father, and he shall give you another Paraclete, that he may abide with you for ever."³ What a higher privilege than filial adoption? Yet it is said, "Ye have received the spirit of filial adoption, by which we cry, Abba, Father."⁴ What a greater treasure than co-inheritance with Christ? Yet we read, "But if children, also

¹ Cor. iii 11.

² Matt. xxiii 9.

³ John xiv 16.

⁴ Rom. viii 15.

heirs: heirs of God, but joint heirs with Christ.”¹ What higher than the vision of God? Yet St Paul bears witness, “We see now through a glass darkly, but then face to face.”² What more wonderful than the power of remitting sins? Yet this very power is granted to the Apostles: “Whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them.”³ What further from human weakness than the power of working miracles? Yet Christ establishes this, “Amen, amen, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works which I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do.”⁴ Indeed, the participation and communion of heavenly gifts have the closest coherence with that supernatural order, which God in creating man chose, and to which he called fallen man back through his only begotten Son; with that dispensation of Christ by which he loved the Apostles as he himself was loved by the Father, by which he called them, not servants, but friends,⁵ and gave them that glory which he had himself received from the Father. And the tone of mind which denies Peter’s prerogative as the Foundation of the Church, under pretence that it is a usurpation of divine power, tends to deny some one or all of the privileges just cited, and, as a fact, does deny some of them. It is wonderful to see how only common and vulgar things are discerned by modern eyes, where the Fathers saw celestial and divine gifts.⁶ Those without the Church have fallen away as well from the several parts and privileges,

¹ Rom. viii 17.

² I Cor. xiii 12.

³ John xx 23.

⁴ John xiv 12.

⁵ John xv 9, 15.

⁶ Passaglia, p. 442, n. 28.

from what may be called the standing order of the Incarnation, as from its final purpose and scope; and it is much if they would not charge with blasphemy that glorious saying put forth by the greatest of the Eastern, as by the greatest of the Western Fathers, "that God became man, in order that man might become God."¹

Was, then, St Chrysostom wrong when he said that our Lord, in that passage of Matthew, showed a power equal to God the Father by the gifts which he bestowed on a poor fisherman? "He who gave to him the keys of the heavens, and made him Lord of such power, and needed not prayer for this, for he did not then say, I prayed, but, with authority, I will build my Church, and I will give to thee the keys of heaven."² Was he wrong when he called him "the chosen of the Apostles, the mouth-piece of the disciples, the head of the band, the ruler over the brethren?"³ or where he saw these prerogatives in the very name of Peter, observing, "When I say Peter, I mean the impregnable rock, the immovable foundation, the great Apostle, the first of the disciples?"⁴

To sum up, then, what has been hitherto said, we have advanced so far as this: first the promise, and then the bestowal of a new name, expressing a singular pre-eminence, and in its proper sense befitting Christ

¹ Ὁ τοῦ Θεοῦ Λόγος ἐνηνθρώπησεν ἵνα ἡμεῖς θεοποιηθῶμεν. St Athan. de Incarn. Factus est Deus homo, ut homo fieret deus. St Aug., Serm. 13, de Temp.

² St Chrys., tom. vii 786. Hom. 82, in Matt.

³ Tom. viii 525. Hom. 88 in Joan.

⁴ Hom. 3, de Pœnitentia. Tom. ii 300.

alone, have distinguished Simon from the rest of the Apostles. But much more the power signified by that name, and explained by the Lord himself, carries far higher Peter's privilege, and indicates him to be the possessor of authority over the Apostles. For if Simon is the Rock of the Church, and if the property of Foundation, on which the structure of the Church rests, belongs to him immediately after Christ, and analogously with Christ, there arises this relation between Christ and Simon, that as he is first, and chiefly, and by inherent power, so Simon is secondarily, by participation and analogy, that which underlies, holds together, and supports the Apostles and the whole fabric of the Church.

Now such a relation carries with it not merely precedency of honour, but superior authority. The strength of the Apostles lay in their union with Christ, and subordination to Him. The like necessity of adhering to Peter is expressed in his new name. Take away that subordination, and you destroy the very image by which the Lord chose to express Peter's dignity; and you remove, likewise, Peter's participation in that property which the Lord communicated to him in the name of the Rock. For if the Apostles needed not to be joined with him, he had no title to be called the Foundation; and if he had no co-active power over the Apostles, he did not share the property by which Christ is the Rock and Foundation. Thus the name, and the dignity expressed by the name, show Peter to have been singly invested by the Lord with both honour and power superior to the Apostles.¹

¹ Passaglia, pp. 48, 49.

CHAPTER II

EDUCATION AND FINAL DESIGNATION OF PETER TO BE THE RULER WHO SHOULD CONFIRM HIS BRETHREN

HAVING promised¹ and bestowed on Simon a new name, prophetic of the peculiar position which he was to occupy in the Church, and having set forth the meaning contained in that name in terms so large and magnificent that, as we have seen, the greatest Saints and Fathers have felt it impossible to exhaust their force, our Lord proceeded to educate Peter, so to say, for his especial charge of supreme ruler. He bestowed upon him, in the course of his ministry, tokens of preference which agree with the title thus solemnly conferred; and he instructed him with all the care which we should expect to be given to one who was to become the chief doctor of Christians. Such instruction may be said to consist in two things: a more complete knowledge of the Christian revelation, and a singular apprehension of its divine proofs.

Now, innumerable as are the particulars in which the Christian revelation consists, they may yet be gathered up mainly in two points, which meet in the person of our Lord, and are termed by the ancient Fathers who have followed this division, the Theology, and the Economy. There is the Divine Nature, that “form of God,” which our Lord had from the beginning in the bosom of the Father; and there is the human nature, that “form of a servant,” which “in the economy or dispensation of the fulness of times” he assumed, in order that he might purchase the Church with his blood, and “re-establish all things in heaven and on earth.”¹ All, therefore, in the Christian faith which concerns “the form of God” is termed the Theology; all which contemplates “the form of a servant,” the Economy.

¹ Passaglia, p. 68.

But the heavenly origin and certain truth of both these parts of Christian faith are proved partly by the fulfilment of prophecy, and partly by the working of miracles. To both our Lord perpetually appealed, and his Apostles after him, and those who have followed them. One, then, who was to be the chief ruler and doctor of Christians, needed especial instruction in the theology and economy, especial assurance of the fulfilment of prophecy, and the working of miraculous power. Now Peter was specially selected for this instruction and that assurance.

The whole teaching of our Lord, indeed, and the innumerable acts of power and words of grace with which it was fraught, were calculated to convey these to all the Apostles. But while they were witnesses in common of that teaching in general, some parts of it were disclosed only to Peter and the two sons of Zebedee. Perhaps there is no incident in the Gospel history, which set forth in so lively a manner, and so convincingly proved, the mysteries concerning the union of “the form of God” and “the form of a servant," as the Transfiguration. After long years Peter recalled that manifestation in proof that he and his brethren had not taught "cunningly devised fables, when they made known the power and presence of the Lord Jesus Christ, but had been eye-witnesses of his majesty. They had heard the voice coming down to him from the excellent glory, 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I have pleased myself: hear ye him.' And this voice we heard brought from heaven, when we were with him in the holy mount." Among all the Apostle's experience of the three years' ministry, by the shore and on the waves of the lake of Galilee, in the cornfields or on the mountain side, in the noonday heat or midnight storm, even in the throng which cried "Hosanna!" and "Crucify him!" this stood out, until "the laying aside of his fleshly tabernacle," as "the Lord had signified to him."¹ For² what indeed was not there?—the plurality of persons in the Godhead, the Father and the Son, the true, and not adopted, Sonship of the latter, his divine mission unto men; the new order of things resulting from it, and the summing up under one head of all things in heaven and in earth; the sealing up and accomplishing of the law and the prophets, by the presence of their representatives, Moses and Elias, a most wonderful and transporting miracle; and the command implicitly to obey him in whom the Father was well pleased. Thus the Transfiguration may be termed the summing up of the whole Christian revelation.

¹ Eph. i 10.

But now of this we read that "after six days Jesus taketh unto him Peter, and James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart." These three alone of the twelve. Yet does he not associate the sons of Zebedee with Peter in this privilege? Needful no doubt it was that so splendid an act should have a suitable number of witnesses, and that as His future glory should have three witnesses from heaven, and as many from earth,¹ so this, its rudimental beginning, should be attested by three as from heaven, God the Father, Moses, and Elias, and by three from earth, Peter, James, and John. Dear to him, likewise, next to Peter, and most privileged after Peter, were the sons of Zebedee; yet a distinction is seen in the mode in which they are treated even when joined together in so great a privilege. For in all the three accounts Peter is named first: "He taketh to him Peter, and James, and John." They likewise are called by their birth-name, he by his prophetic appellation of the Rock; they are silent, but he speaks: "Peter answering, said"; nor only speaks but in the name of all: "It is good for us to be here," as if their leader. And, fifthly, he is named specially, they as his companions: "but Peter, and they that were with him, were heavy with sleep."² Thus even when three are associated in a special privilege above the twelve, Peter is distinguished among the three.

¹ 2 Pet. i 14.

² Passaglia, p. 69.

But if there was one other occasion on which above all "the form of the servant" was to be set forth in the most awful, and the most endearing light, it was on that evening, "the hour" of evil men and "the power of darkness," when "the righteous servant who should justify many" was about to perform the great central, crowning act of his mediation. Then we read that "He said to his disciples, Sit you here, till I go yonder and pray."¹ And then immediately "taking with him Peter, and the two sons of Zebedee, he began to grow sorrowful and to be sad." Yet here again, even in the association with the sons of Zebedee, Simon is distinguished, for he is named first; and by the illustrious name of Peter, the Rock; and as the leader of the others, for, says Matthew, Christ after his first prayer "comes to his disciples, and finds them sleeping, and says to Peter, What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" Why the change of number, Peter in the singular, ye in the plural? Why the blame of Peter, involving the blame of the rest? Because the members are censured in the head.

¹ 1 John v 6, 7.

² Luke ix 32.

In these two signal instances our Lord, while preferring Peter and the two sons of Zebedee to the rest of the Twelve, yet marks a gradation likewise between them and Peter. And these two set forth the theology and economy, in the most emphatic manner.

And as the supreme preceptor must not only be acquainted with the truth which he has to deliver, but with the evidence on which it rests, so is Peter specially made a witness of his Lord's "power and presence" and "the works which no other man did." In that remarkable miracle of raising to life the daughter of the ruler of the synagogue we read: "He admitted not any man to follow him, but Peter and James, and John the brother of James";² where, as before, and always, Peter is mentioned first, and by the prophetic name of his Primacy.

¹ Matt. xxvi 36.

² Mark v 35.

From¹ all which we gather four points: 1. Several things are mentioned in the Gospels which Christ gave to Peter, and not to the rest of the Apostles. 2. But nothing which he gave to them together, and not to Peter with them. 3. What he seemed to give to them in common, yet accrues to Peter in a special manner, who appears among the Apostles not as one out of the number, but their destined head, by the name, that is, of Peter, so markedly promised, bestowed, and so wonderfully explained by our Lord. Of this name, as we have seen, St Chrysostom, an Eastern patriarch, as well as a great Saint and Father, observed, "When I say Peter, I mean the impregnable Rock, the immovable Foundation, the great Apostle, the first of the disciples." 4. Either we are not to take Christ's dealing as the standard of Peter's dignity and destination, or we must admit that he was preferred to the rest, and made the supreme teacher of the faithful.

St Matthew records the incidents of the officers asking for the payment of the didrachma which all the children of Israel were bound to contribute to the Temple; and his words show us a fresh instance of honour done to Peter, and a fresh note of his superiority. "When they were come to Capharnaum, they that received the didrachma came to Peter, and said to him, Doth not your Master pay the didrachma?"² But why should they come to him, and ask, not if his Master, but "your" Master, the Master of all the Apostles, paid the census, save that it was apparent, even to strangers, that Peter was the first, and most prominent of the company? Why use him rather than any of the others, for the purpose of approaching Christ? "As Peter seemed to be the first of the disciples," says St Chrysostom, on the text, "they go to him." The context naturally suggests this reason, and the ancient commentators remarked it. But what follows is much more striking. Peter answered, Yes, that is, that his Master observed all the laws of Moses, and this among the number. As he went home he purposed, no doubt, to ask our Lord about this payment, but "when he was come into the house Jesus prevented him," having in his omniscience seen and heard all that had passed, and he proceeded to speak words involving his own high dignity, followed by a singular trial of Peter's faith, and as marked a reward of it when tried. "What thinkest thou, Simon? The kings of the earth, of whom do they receive tribute or custom? of their own children or of strangers? And he said, Of strangers. Jesus said to him, Then the children are free." Slight words in seeming, yet declaring in fact that most wonderful truth which had formed so shortly before Peter's confession, and drawn down upon him the yet unexhausted promise; for they expressed, I am as truly the Son of that God, the Sovereign of the Temple, for whom this tribute is paid, as the children of earthly sovereigns, who take tribute, are their sons by nature. Therefore by right I am free. "But that we may not scandalize them, go to the sea and cast in a hook; and that fish which shall first come up, take; and when thou hast opened its mouth, thou shalt find a stater; take that, and give it to them for me and thee." Declaring to his favoured disciple afresh that he is the true, and not the adopted, Son of God, answering his thoughts by anticipation, and expressing his knowledge of absent things by the power of the Son of God, he tries his faith by the promise of a fresh miracle, which involved a like exercise of divine power. Peter, in proceeding to execute his command, must make that confession afresh by deed, which he had made before by word, and which his Lord had just repeated with his own mouth. How else could he go to the lake expecting to draw at the first cast a fish in whose mouth he should find a coin containing the exact amount due to the Temple for two persons? But what followed? What but a most remarkable reward for the faith which he should show? "Take that, and give it to them for me and thee." There are looks, there are tones of the voice, which convey to us more than language. So, too, there are acts so exceedingly suggestive, that without in any formal way proving, they carry with them the force of the strongest proof. And so, perhaps, never did our Lord in a more marked manner associate Peter with himself than here. It was a singular distinction which could not fail to strike every one who heard it. Thus St Chrysostom exclaims, "You see the exceeding greatness of the honour";¹ and he adds, "wherefore, too, in reward for his faith he connected him with himself in the payment of the tribute." Indeed, how could one of the disciples be more signally pointed out than by this incident, as "the faithful and wise steward, whom the Lord would set over his household, to give them their portion of food in due time"?

¹ Passaglia, p. 72.

² Matt. xvii 23.

¹ On Matt., Hom. 58, n. 2.

Other Fathers, as well as St Chrysostom, did not fail to see such a meaning in this passage; but let us take the words of Origen as pointing out the connection of this incident with the important question following. His words are: "It seems to me that (the disciples) considering this a very great honour which had been done to Peter by Jesus, in having put him higher than the rest of his disciples, they wished to make sure of what they suspected by asking Jesus, and hearing his answer, whether, as they supposed, he judged Peter to be above them; and they also hoped to learn the cause for which Peter was preferred to the rest of the disciples. Matthew, then, wishing to signify this by these words, 'take that, and give it to them for me and thee,' added, 'on that day the disciples came to Jesus, saying, Who, thinkest thou, is the greater in the kingdom of heaven?'"¹

For, indeed, why should they immediately ask this question? The preceding incident furnishes a natural and sufficient cause. The Apostles, it seems, were urged by the plainness of Christ's words and acts to inquire who among them should have the chief authority. Who will not agree with St Chrysostom: "The Apostles were touched with a human infirmity, which the Evangelist, too, signifies in the words, 'in that hour,' when he had honoured him (Peter) before them all. For though of James and John one of the two was the first-born" (alluding to an opinion that the tax was paid by the first-born), "he did nothing like it for them. Hence, being ashamed, they confessed their excitement of mind, and do not say plainly,

¹ Origen on the text, in Matt., tom. xiii 14.

Why hast thou preferred Peter to us? Is he greater than we are? For this they do not dare; but they ask indefinitely, Who is the greater? For when they saw three preferred to the rest, they felt nothing like this; but when one received so great an honour they were pained. Nor were they kindled by this alone, but by putting together many other things. For he had said to him, 'I will give to thee the keys,' and 'Blessed art thou, Simon Bar Jona,' and here, 'Give it to them for me and for thee'; and also they were pricked at seeing his confidence and freedom of speech."¹

Thus their question, if it did not express, at least suggested this meaning, "Speak more plainly and distinctly whether Peter is to be the greater and the chief in the Church, and accordingly among us," and so they seem to have drawn from our Lord's act a conclusion which they did not see in the promising or bestowing the prophetic name of Peter, nor even in the promises conveyed in explaining that name, and were vexed at the preference shown to him.

And if² any be inclined to conclude from hence that our Lord's words and acts to Peter had not been of any marked significance, they should be reminded that the very clearest and plainest things were sometimes not understood by the Apostles, before the descent of the Holy Spirit on them. This was specially the case with the things which they were disinclined to believe. Thus our Lord again and again foretold to them his passion in express terms, but we are told, "they understood none of these things."¹ He foretold, too, his resurrection, yet they did not in the least expect it, and they became at length fully assured of the fact before they remembered the prediction. Strange as these things seem, yet probably every one's private experience will furnish him with similar instances of a veil being cast upon his eyes, which prevented his discerning the most evident things, towards which there was generally some secret disinclination.

¹ St Chrysostom on the text, Hom. 58, tom. vii, p. 587.

² Passaglia, p. 77, n. 38.

But² how did our Lord answer their question? Did he remove at once the ground of their jealousy by declaring that in the kingdom of heaven no one should have pre-eminence of dignity, but the condition of all be equal? On the contrary, he condemns ambition and enjoins humility, but likewise gives such a turn to his discourse as to insinuate that there would be one pre-eminent over the rest. "Jesus calling unto him a little child, set him in the midst of them, and said, Amen I say unto you, unless you be converted and become as little children, you shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."³ Then he adds, "Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, he is the greater in the kingdom of heaven." Thus he did not exclude the pre-eminence of that "greater one," about which they asked, but pointed out what his character ought to be. But this will be much clearer from a like inquiry, and the answer to it, recorded by St Luke.

For even at the Last Supper, our Lord having told them that he should be betrayed, and was going to leave them in the way determined for him, there was not only an inquiry among them which of them should do that thing, but also, so keenly were their minds as yet, before the coming down of the Holy Spirit, alive to the desire of pre-eminence, "there was a strife among them which of them should seem to be greater." Now our Lord meets their contention thus: "The kings of the Gentiles lord it over them, and they that have power over them are called beneficent. But you not so; but he that is the greater among you, let him become as the younger; and he that is the leader, as he that serveth. For which is greater, he that sitteth at table, or he that serveth? Is not he that sitteth at table? But I am in the midst of you as he that serveth. And you are they who have continued with me in my temptations; and I dispose to you, as my Father hath disposed to me, a kingdom; that you may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom; and may sit upon thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."¹

¹ Luke xviii 34. ² Passaglia, p. 78. ³ Matt. xviii 2.

Now² in this speech of our Lord we may remark four points:

1. What is omitted, though it would seem most apposite to be said.
2. What is affirmed, if not expressly, yet by plain consequence.
3. What comparison is used in illustration.
4. What meets with censure and rejection.

1. First, then, though the Apostles had twice before contended about pre-eminence, yet our Lord neither there, nor here, said openly that he would not prefer any one over the rest, or appoint any one to be their leader. Yet the importance of the subject, his own wisdom, and his love towards his disciples, as well as his usual mode of acting, seemed to demand that, had it been his will for no one of them to be set over the rest, he should plainly declare it, and thus extinguish all strife. No less a matter was at issue than the harmony of the Apostles with each other, the peace of the Church and the success of the divine counsel for its government. Moreover, the Gospels represent him to us as continually removing doubts, clearing up perplexities, and correcting wrong judgements among his disciples. Let us recall to mind a very similar occasion, when the mother of the sons of Zebedee with her children came before him, asking "that these my two sons may sit the one on thy right hand and the other on thy left, in thy kindgom." He rejected their prayer at once, saying, "To sit on my right or my left hand is not mine to give to you, but to them for whom it is prepared by my Father."¹ The silence, therefore, of Christ here, under such circumstances, is a proof that it was not the divine will that all the Apostles should be in such a sense equal that no one of them should hold a superior authority over the rest.

¹ Luke xxii 25.

² Passaglia, p. 77.

2. But eloquent as this silence is, we are not left to trust to it alone, for our Lord's words point out, besides, the institution of one superior. "The kings of the Gentiles," he says, "lord it over them; and they that have power over them are called benefactors. But you not so: but he that is the greater among you, let him become as the younger; and he that is the leader, as he that serveth." A greater and a leader, then, there was to be. Our Lord's words contain two parallel propositions repeated: 1. There is among you one who is the greater, let him, then, be as the younger. 2. There is among you one who is the leader, let him be as he that serveth. Thus our Lord's meaning is most distinct that they should have a superior.

¹ Matt. xx 20.

But in the very similar passage about the sons of Zebedee, lest any should conclude that no one of the Apostles was to be superior to the rest, he called them to him, and said, "You know that the princes of the Gentiles lord it over them, and they that are the greater exercise power upon them. It shall not be so among you, but whosoever will be the greater among you, let him be your minister; and he that will be the first among you shall be your servant. Even as the Son of Man is not come to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a redemption for many." Where he tells them his will, not that no one of the Apostles should be "great" and "first," but what the type and model should be which that "great" and "first" one should imitate, even the Son of Man who came to minister.

3. For to make this quite certain, there, and here too, he directs us to a particular comparison, by which he explains and concludes his discourse, "For who is greater, he that sitteth at table, or he that serveth? Is not he that sitteth at table? But I am among you as he that serveth. . . . And I dispose unto you, as my Father disposed unto me, a kingdom." Here our Lord sets himself before his Apostles as the exemplar both of the rule which the superior was to exercise, and of the temper and character which he was to show. As he had been speaking of the kingdoms of the Gentiles, so he now points out to them in contrast the true kingdom which he was disposing unto them. The Church, as it had been from the beginning, was to be the model of what it should be to the end. Now all confess that in that Church Christ had held the place of "the First," "the Great One," "the Ruler." And now he explains that one of his Apostles should occupy that place of his, and occupying it should be of a like temper with himself, who had been the minister and servant of all. And it may be remarked that the same word is here applied to him who should rule among the disciples, which expresses the dignity of Christ himself in the prophecy of Micheas, quoted in Matt. ii 6, "Out of thee shall go forth¹ the ruler, who shall be shepherd over my people Israel." For Christ says, "He that is the greater among you, let him be as the younger; and he that ruleth, as he that serveth. For who is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he who serveth? But I am among you as he that serveth." "I dispose to you a kingdom, as my Father disposed to me:" let him who follows me in place, follow me in character.

But, 4, what does our Lord censure and reject from his Church? It is plain that he compares kingdom with kingdom, and the kingdom of heaven, which is the Church, with human kingdoms, and, moreover, that the negative quality as to which, in the clause, "But you not so," the two are compared, is, not the fact that there is pre-eminence and rule in both, but a certain mode of exercising them. This is the pomp and ambition expressed in the words, "lording it," "exercising authority," "are called beneficent." As again is shown in the repeated declaration that what had been most alien from the spirit of his own ministry should not appear in the ministry that he would establish after him. Now, he had shown no pomp and pride of dominion, but yet he had shown the dominion itself in the fullest sense, the power of passing laws, enjoining precepts, defining rites, threatening punishments, governing, in short, his Church, so that he had been pre-eminently "the Lord." Lastly, this is shown in the words recorded by St John, as said shortly after on this same occasion: "You call me Master and Lord, and you say well, for so I am. If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, you also ought to wash one another's feet: for I have given you an example, that as I have done unto you, so you also may do."¹

¹ ἡγούμενος.

Now, nothing can show more strongly than this discourse the pre-eminence and authority which our Lord was going to establish in one of his Apostles over the rest. For here we have his intention disclosed that in his kingdom, which is the Church, some one there should be "the Great," "the First," and "the Ruler," who should discharge, in due proportion and analogy, the office which he himself, before he returned to the Father, had held. But before we consider further who this one was, let us look at the subject from a somewhat different point of view.

¹ John xiii 15.

And¹ here we must lay down three points, the first of which is, that our Lord, during his life on earth, had acted in two capacities, the one as the Author and Founder, the other as the Head and Supreme Ruler of his Church. His functions in the former capacity are too plain to need enlarging upon. He disclosed the objects of our faith; he instituted rites and sacraments; he provided by the establishment of a ministry for the perpetual growth and duration of the Church. It was in this sense that he spoke of himself to his Apostles, as “the Master,” who could share his prerogatives with no one: “But be not you called Rabbi, for one is your Master, and all you are brethren.”² Thus is he “the Teacher,” “the Master,” throughout the Gospel.

But he likewise acted as the Head of his Church, with the dignity and authority of the chief visible Ruler. He was the living bond of his disciples; the person around whom they grouped; whose presence wrought harmony; whose voice terminated contention among them; who was ever at hand to solve emergent difficulties. Thus it is that prophecy distinguished him as “the Lord,” “the King,” “the Shepherd”; “on whose shoulders is the government,” “who should rule his people Israel.” And his Church answers to him in this capacity, as the family, the house, the city, the fold, and the kingdom.

Thus his relation to the Church was twofold: as Founder, and as Supreme Pastor.

Secondly, the Church shares her Lord’s prerogative of unchangeableness, and as he is “Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever," so she, his mystical body, in her proportion remains like herself from the beginning to the end. The Church and Christianity are bound to each other in a mutual relation; the Church is Christianity embodied; Christianity is the Church in conception; the consistency and identity which belong to Christianity belong likewise to her; neither can change their nature, nor put on another form.

¹ Passaglia, p. 82.

² Matt. xxiii 8.

But, thirdly, the Church would be unlike herself, if, having been from her very cradle visibly administered by the rule of One, she fell subsequently, either under no rule at all, according to the doctrine of the Independents, or under the rule of the multitude, according to the Calvinists, or under the rule of an aristocracy, as Episcopalians imagine. A change of government superinduces a change of that substantial form which constitutes a society. But this holds in her case especially, above all other societies, as she came forth from the creative hand of her Lord, her whole organization instinct with inward life, her government directly instituted by God himself, in which lies her point of distinction from all temporal polities.

For imagine that, upon our Lord's departure, no one had been deputed to take the visible headship and rule over the Church. How, without ever fresh revelations, and an abiding miraculous power, could that complex unity of faith, of worship, and of polity, have been maintained, which the Lord has set forth as the very sign and token of his Church ?¹ A multitude scattered throughout the most distant regions, and naturally differing in race, in habits, in temperament, how could it possibly be joined in one, and remain one, without a powerful bond of unity? Hence, in the fourth century, St Jerome observed, "The safety of the Church depends on the dignity of the supreme Priest, in whom, if all do not recognize a peculiar and supereminent power, there will arise as many schisms in the Church as there are priests."¹ And the repentant confessors out of Novatian's schism, in the middle of the third century, "We know that Cornelius (the Pope) has been elected Bishop of the most holy Catholic Church, by Almighty God and Christ our Lord.—We are not ignorant that there is one God, one Christ the Lord, whom we confessed, one Holy Spirit, and that there ought to be one Bishop in the Catholic Church."² And these words, both of St Jerome, and of the confessors, if they primarily apply to the diocesan bishop among his priests and people, so do they with far greater force apply to the chief Bishop among his brethren in the whole Church. Now, as our Lord willed that his Church should do without fresh revelations and new miracles, such as at first accredited it, and that it should preserve unity; and as, when it was a little flock, which could be assembled in a single room, it had yet one visible Ruler, how can we doubt that he willed this form of government to remain, and that there should be one perpetually to rule it in his name, and preserve it in unity, since it was to become co-extensive with the earth?

¹ John x, xiii, xvii.

Again, we may ask, was the condition of fold, house, family, city, and kingdom, so repeatedly set forth in Holy Scripture, to belong to the Church only while Christ was yet on earth, or to be the visible evidence of its truth for ever? Do these terms exhibit a temporary, or a perpetual state? Each one of these symbols by itself, and all together, involve one visible Ruler; therefore, so long as the Church can be called with truth the one house, the one family, the one city, the one fold, the one kingdom, so long must it have one visible and supreme Ruler.

¹ Dialog. cont. Lucif., n. 9.

² St Cyprian, Ep. 46.

But once grant that such a one there was after our Lord's departure, and no one can doubt that one to have been Peter. It is easier to deny the supreme Ruler altogether, than to make him any one but Peter. The whole course of the Gospels shows none other marked out by so many distinctions. Thus, even those who wish to refuse a real power to his Primacy are compelled by the force of evidence to allow him a Primacy of order and honour.

But nothing did our Lord more pointedly reject than the vain pomp of titles and honours. In nothing is his own example more marked than in that he exercised real power and supreme authority without pomp or show. Nothing did he enjoin more emphatically on the disciple who should be the "Great One," and "the Ruler," among his brethren, than that he must follow his Master in being the servant of all. A Primacy, then, consisting in titles and mere precedency, is of all things most opposed to the spirit and the precepts of our Lord. And so the Primacy which he designated must be one of real power and pre-eminent authority.

And this brings us back to the passage of St Luke which we were considering, where four things prove that Christ had such a headship in view. First, the occasion, for the Apostles were contending for a place of real authority. The sons of Zebedee expressed it by sitting on his right hand and on his left, that is, holding the second and the third place of dignity in the kingdom.

Secondly, the double comparison which our Lord used, the one negative, the other affirmative: in the former, contrasting the Church's Ruler with the kings of the Gentiles, he excluded pomp and splendour, lordship and ambition; in the latter, referring him to his own example, who had the most real and true power and superiority, he taught him to unite these with a meekness and an attention to the wants of his brethren, of which his own life had been the model.

Thirdly, the words "the First," "the Greater," and "the Ruler" indicate the pre-eminence of the future head, for as they appear in the context, and according to their scriptural force, they indicate not a vain and honorary but a real authority, one of them being even the very title given to our Lord.

And, fourthly, this is proved by the object in view, which is, maintaining the identity of the Church and the form which it had from the beginning, and preserving its manifold unity. As to its identity, and original form, it is needless to observe that Christ exercised in it not an honorary but a real supremacy, so that under him its government was really in the hands of one, the Ruler. As to the preservation of its unity—and especially a unity so complex—the very analogy of human society will sufficiently teach us that it is impossible to be preserved without a strong central authority. Contentions can neither be checked as they arise, nor terminated when they come to a head, without the interference of a power to which all yield obedience. And the living example of those religious societies which have not this power is an argument whose force none can resist. Where Peter is not, there is neither unity of faith, nor of charity, nor of external regimen.

No sooner,¹ then, had our Lord in this manner pointed out that there should be one hereafter to take his place on earth and to be the Ruler of his brethren, expressing at the same time the toilsome nature of the trust, and the duty of exercising it with the spirit which he, the great model, had shown, than, turning his discourse from the Apostles, whom hitherto he had addressed in common, to Peter singly, he proceeded to designate Peter as that one, to assure him of a singular privilege, and to enforce upon him a proportionate duty.

And first, a break in the hitherto continuous discourse is ushered in by the words, "And the Lord said," and what follows is fixed to Peter specially, by the reiteration of his name, "Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat": to have you, that is, not Peter alone, but all the Apostles, the same you, whom in the preceding verses he had so often repeated, "you not so," "I am in the midst of you," "you are they that have continued with me," "and I dispose to you a kingdom,” “that you may eat and drink with me”; and what follows? What was the resource provided by the Lord against this attack of the great enemy on all his fold? “But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and thou being once converted confirm thy brethren.” Not “I have prayed for you” where all were assaulted, “that your faith fail not,” but I have prayed for thee, Peter, that thy faith fail not! Nothing can be more emphatic than this change of number, when our Lord throughout all his previous discourse had used the plural, and now, continuing the plural to designate the persons attacked, uses the singular to specify the person for whom he has prayed, and to whom he assures a singular privilege, the fruit of that prayer. Nothing could more strongly prove that this address was special to Peter.

¹ Passaglia, p. 89.

Nor less evident is the singular dignity of what is here promised to him. First of all, it is the fruit of the prayer of Christ. Of what importance must that be which was solicited by our Lord of his Father, and at a moment when the redemption of the world was being accomplished, and when his Passion may be said to have begun? Of what importance that which was to be the defence not of Peter only, but all the disciples, against the most formidable assault of the great enemy, who had demanded¹ them as it were to deliver them over to punishment? And this was “that thy faith fail not.” How is it possible to draw any other conclusion here than what St Leo in the fifth century expressed so clearly before all the bishops of Italy? “The danger from the temptation of fear was common to all the Apostles, and all equally needed the help of the divine protection, since the devil desired to dismay all, to crush all; and yet a special care of Peter is undertaken by our Lord, and he prays peculiarly for the faith of Peter, as if the state of the rest would be more sure, if the mind of their chief were not conquered. In Peter, therefore, the fortitude of all is protected, and the help of divine grace is so ordered, that the firmness which through Christ is given to Peter, through Peter is conferred on the Apostles.”¹ And if such is the importance of the help secured, no less is the charge following: “And thou, being once converted, confirm thy brethren.” To confirm others is to be put in an office of dignity and authority over them. And his brethren were those whom our Lord till now had been addressing in common with him; to whom he had just disclosed “a Greater” and “a Ruler” “among” them; that is, the Apostles themselves. Among these, then, when our Lord’s visible presence was withdrawn, Peter was to be the principle of stability, binding and moulding them into one building. For one cannot fail to see how this great promise and prophecy answers to those in Matthew. There our Lord, as Architect, promised to lay Peter as the foundation of the Church, against which the gates of hell should not prevail: here, being about to leave the world, when his own work was finished, to ascend unto his Father, and to assume his great power and reign, he makes Peter as it were the Architect to carry on the work which was to be completed by his grace and authority, but by human co-operation. So exact is the resemblance that we may put the two promises in parallel columns to illustrate each other:

¹ ἐξυτήσατο. The word in classic Greek has this force.

¹ Serm. 4, c. 3.

Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not; and thou, being once converted, confirm thy brethren.

But light is thrown on the greatness of this pre-eminence thus bestowed on Peter of confirming his brethren, if we consider that the term is applied to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, as bestowing by inherent power what is here granted by participation. Of the Father it is said, "To him that is able to establish you according to my Gospel—the only wise God, through Jesus Christ, be honour and glory." And again, "Now he that confirmeth us with you in Christ, and that hath anointed us, is God;" and again, "The God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory in Christ Jesus, after you have suffered a little, will himself perfect you, confirm, establish you."¹ Of Christ likewise: "As therefore you have received Jesus Christ the Lord, walk ye in him, rooted and built up in him, and confirmed in the faith." And "waiting for the manifestation of our Lord Jesus Christ, who also will confirm you unto the end without crime." And again: "Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself exhort your hearts, and confirm you in every good word and work."² And the Holy Spirit is continually mentioned as the author of this gift, when, for instance, to him is ascribed "the teaching all truth,"

¹ Rom. xvi 25; 2 Cor. i 21; 1 Pet. v 10.

² Col. ii 6; 1 Cor. i 7; 2 Thess. ii 16.

“ the leading into all truth,” “ the bringing to mind ” all things which Christ had said. And St Paul prays “ that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened by his Spirit with might unto the inward man.”¹

What, therefore, is proper to the most Holy Trinity, and given in the highest sense by the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, it was the will of Christ should be shared by Peter, according as man is capable of it. That is, it was his pleasure that the same man, whom he had intimately associated with himself by communicating to him his prerogative to be the Rock, should be closely joined with the Blessed Trinity, by participating in that privilege, whereby, together with the Father and the Holy Spirit, he is the confirmation and stability of the faithful. But if any rule there can be whereby to measure pre-eminence and dignity, it is surely that which is derived from participation of divine properties and offices. And the closer that by these Peter is shown to have approached to God, the higher his exaltation above the rest of his brethren, who, as it has been observed, are the Apostles. To them he is the Rock, and them he is to confirm. Thus Theophylact, in the eleventh century, commenting on this text, says, “ The plain meaning of this is, that, since I hold thee as the ruler of my disciples, after thou shalt have wept over thy denial and repented, confirm the rest. For this belongs to thee as being after me the rock and support ” (literally, confirmation) “ of the Church. Now, one may see that this is said not only of the Apostles, that they are confirmed by Peter, but also concerning all the faithful until the consummation of the world.”

¹ John xvi 13; xiv 16, 26; Eph. iii 16.

But looking more closely into the nature of this dignity, since Christ, by the bestowal of heavenly gifts, caused Peter to be conspicuous through the firmness of his own faith, and through the charge of confirming the faith of his brethren, we can call it by no fitter name than a Primacy of faith. For it has these two qualities: it cannot fail itself; and it confirms others. And for the authority which it carries, such a Primacy of faith cannot even be imagined without at the same time imagining the office by which Peter was bound to watch over the firmness and integrity of the common faith. In this office two things are involved: first, the right to, and therefore the possession of, all things necessary for its fulfilment; and secondly, the duty by which all were bound to agree in the profession of one faith with Peter. So that Peter's dignity, rightly termed the Primacy of faith, mainly consists in the supreme right of demanding from all an agreement in faith with him.

It¹ remains to explain the proper force of the word confirm. Now, this is a term of architecture, and as such is joined with other terms relating to that art, as by St Peter, “the God of all grace . . . himself fit you together” (as living spiritual stones), “confirm, strengthen, ground you.”² It means, to make anything fit so firmly that it cannot be shaken. Thus in Holy Writ it frequently bears metaphorically a moral signification, such as encouraging, supporting, as we say, confirming the resolution, as in the passage just quoted; and again, “ Be watchful, and confirm the things that remain, which are ready to die.”¹ Now, it cannot be doubted that the phrase “ confirm thy brethren,” carries a moral sense very like that in which the word confirm, when applied to the spiritual building of the Church, is used of God and of Christ,² from whom the Church has both its being and its perseverance to the end, and again of the Apostles, who strengthen the flock entrusted to them by the imparting spiritual gifts, as St Paul says, “ I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual grace to strengthen you.”³ Or, again, it is used of bishops, who, as sent by the Apostles, and charged by the Holy Spirit with the government of the Church, are bid to be watchful and see that those who stand do not fall, and those who are in danger do not perish.⁴ Accordingly, when it is said to Peter, “ And thou, in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren,” the charge and office are laid upon him, as an architect divinely chosen, of holding together, strengthening, and keeping in their place the several parts of the ecclesiastical structure.

¹ Passaglia, p. 563.

² 1 Pet. v 10.

But what are these parts to be confirmed, and what is the nature of the confirmation ?

As to the first question there can be no controversy, it being determined by the words “ confirm thy brethren,” and it is plain, from what is said above, that by brethren are meant the Apostles. He had, therefore, the Apostles committed to his charge

¹ Apoc. iii 2.

² Rom. xvi 25; 1 Thess. iii 13; 2 Thess. ii 17; 1 Pet. v 10.

³ Rom. i 11.

⁴ Apoc. iii 2.

immediately; but likewise, the rest of all the faithful mediately. When a person has been named by Christ to confirm the Apostles expressly, the nature of the case does not allow that the whole congregation of believers be not in their persons committed to him. The care of the flock is manifestly involved in the care of the shepherds; and no one in his senses can doubt that the man who is charged to support the pillars is charged to keep in their place the inferior stones.

And as to the nature of the confirmation, it is for protection against the fraud of the great enemy. And the danger lay in losing the faith. Peter, then, is charged to confirm, in such sense that neither the pillars of the Church, nor its inferior parts, may, by the loss of faith, be moved from their place, and so severed from the Church's structure. No charge can be higher than such an office of confirmation; nor for anything need we to be more thankful to our Saviour. Nothing can more distinctly show the divinely appointed relation between Peter on the one hand, and on the other, the rest of the Apostles, and the whole company of the faithful; nothing define more clearly the special authority of Peter; that is, to protect and strengthen the unity of the faith, and to possess all powers needed for such protection.

This charge was given after that by the prayer of Christ the privilege had been gained for Peter's faith, that it should never fail. Hence, that faith is become, in virtue of such prayer, the infallible standard of evangelical truth: as St Cyprian expressed it of old, " that faith of the Romans, which perfidy cannot approach."¹ It follows that all the faithful owe to it obedience. And Peter's authority rests on a double title, external of mission, internal of spiritual gift: the former contained in the words of Christ the legislator, "And thou,² in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren;" the latter, in the words of Christ the

¹ St Cyprian, Ep. 55.

² As far as the words by themselves go, it is the opinion of the best commentators that they may be equally well rendered, "And thou, when thou art converted," or "And thou, in thy turn, one day," etc. But as it is impossible to bring a discussion turning on a Hebrew idiom conveyed in a Greek word before the English reader, we must here restrict ourselves to the proof arising from the sense and context. And here one thing alone, among several which may be urged, is sufficient to prove that the sense preferred in the text, "And thou, in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren," is the true one. For the other rendering supposes that the time of Peter's conversion would also be the time of his confirming his brethren; whereas this was far otherwise. He was converted by our Lord looking on him that same night shortly after his denial, and "immediately went out and wept bitterly." But he did not succeed to the charge of confirming his brethren till after our Lord's ascension. It must be added that the collocation of the original words καὶ σὺ ποτὲ ἐπιστρέψας στήριξον is such as absolutely to require that the joint action indicated by them should belong to the same time, and that an indefinite time expressed by ποτέ. Now this would be false according to the rendering, "And thou, when thou art converted, confirm thy brethren," for the conversion was immediate and definite, the confirmation distant and indefinite; whereas it exactly agrees with the rendering, "And thou, in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren."

Those who wish to see the whole controversy admirably drawn out, may find it in Passaglia, b. ii, ch. 13.

bestower of all gifts, "But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not."

More than a thousand years ago two Easterns seem to have expressed all this, one the Bishop Stephen, suppliantly approaching Pope Martin I, in the Lateran Synod of A.D. 649, and speaking of "the blessed Peter, in a manner special and peculiar to himself, having above all a firm and immutable faith in our Lord God, to consider with compassion, and confirm his spiritual partners and brethren when tossed by doubt: inasmuch as he has received power and sacerdotal authority, according to the dispensation over all, from the very God for our sakes incarnate."¹ And Theodore, Abbot of the Studium, at Constantinople, addressing Pope Paschal I, A.D. 817, in the midst of persecution from the state, as if he were Peter himself: "Hear, O Apostolic Head, O shepherd of the sheep of Christ, set over them by God, O doorkeeper of the kingdom of heaven, O rock of the faith upon which the Catholic Church is built. For Peter art thou, who adornest and governest the See of Peter. To thee, said Christ our God, 'And thou, in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren.' Behold the time, behold the place, help us, thou who art ordained by God for this. Stretch forth thy hand as far as may be: power thou hast from God, because thou art the chief of all."²

Now let us³ view in its connection the whole scope of our Lord's discourse. We shall see how naturally the contest of the Apostles arose out of what he had told them, and how well the former and the latter part of his answer harmonize together, and terminate that contest. We learn from St John's record of this divine conversation, that our Lord besought his Father, saying, "While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name . . . but now I come to thee:" that is, so long as I was with them visibly in the world (for invisibly I will always be with them, and nurture them with the spiritual influx of the Vine), I kept them united in thy name; "but now I come to thee," I leave the world, I relinquish the office of visible head. It remains, that by the appointment of another visible head, thou shouldst entrust him with my office, provide for the conspicuous unity of all, and preserve them joined unto each other and to us. So St Luke tells us, that no sooner had our Lord declared to the Apostles, "the Son of Man indeed goeth according to that which is determined," than they began to have a strife among them, "which of them should seem to be the greater." For they had heard that Christ would withdraw his visible presence, and they had heard him also earnestly entreating of the Father to provide for their visible unity. Accordingly, the time seemed at hand when another was to take this office of visible head; hence their questioning, who should be the greater among them. Now our Lord does not reprove this inference of theirs, but he does reprove the temper in which they were coveting pre-eminence. For, engaged as they were in the strife, he warned them that the person who should be "the Greater and the Ruler" among them, must follow in the discharge of his office the rule and the standard which he had set up in his own conduct, and not that which the kings of the Gentiles follow. Thus, setting these in sharp contrast, he proceeds: "The kings, indeed, of the nations lord it over their subjects and love high titles, and to be called benefactors; but I, though Lord and Master amongst you, have dealt otherwise, as you know. For I have exercised, not a lordship, but a servitude; I have not sat at table, but waited; I have not cared for titles, but called you friends and brethren. Let this example, then, be before you all, but especially before him who is to be the greater and the ruler among you. For I appoint unto you, and dispose of you, as my Father hath disposed of me; of me he hath disposed that through humiliation, emptying of myself, ignominy, and manifold temptations, I should gain the kingdom, reach the joys of heaven, and obtain all power in heaven and on earth. So likewise dispose I of you, that through humility, sufferings, reproaches, hunger, thirst, and all manner of temptations, you may reach whither I have come, being worthy, after your hunger and your thirst, to eat and drink at my table in my kingdom; after being despised and dishonoured, to sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Now, hitherto you have trodden with me this royal way full of sorrows, and have continued with me in my temptations. But little will it profit to begin, if you persevere not to the end. None shall be crowned, save he who has contended lawfully; none be saved, but he who perseveres to the end. Will you remain with me still in your temptations to come, and when I am no longer present with you visibly, to protect and exhort, will you preserve your steadfastness? Simon, Simon, behold! I see Satan exerting all his force to overcome your purpose, and to destroy the fidelity which you have hitherto shown me. I see the danger to your faith and your salvation approaching. But I, who, when visibly present with you, left nothing undone to guard, protect, and strengthen you visibly, so, too, when separated from your bodily sight, will yet not leave you without a visible support. Wherefore, Peter, I have prayed for thee, that thou fail not, and thou, in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren. Remember that thou hast to discharge that part visibly towards thy brethren, which I, while yet mortal and visible, discharged; remember that I therefore had special care of thee, because it was my will that thou, confirmed by my prayers, shouldst confirm thy brethren, my disciples, and my friends.”¹

¹ Mansi, Concilia, x 894.

² Baronius, Annal., A.D. 817, xxi.

³ Passaglia, p. 545.

Now, from² what has been said, it appears that Peter in Holy Scripture is set forth as the source and principle of ecclesiastical unity under a double but cognate image, as Foundation, and as Confirmer. Of the former we will here say nothing further, but a few consequences of the latter it is desirable here to group together.

I. The unity, then, which consists in the profession of one and the same faith, is conspicuous among those³ modes of unity by which Christ has willed that his Church should be distinguished. Now, first, St Paul declares that the whole ministerial hierarchy, from the Apostolate downwards, was instituted by our Lord, for the sake of obtaining and preserving this unity. “He gave some Apostles, and some Prophets, and other some Evangelists, and other some pastors and doctors, for the perfecting" literally, the fitting in together, the same word which St Peter had used in his prayer, ch. v 10), "of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ; until we all meet into the unity of faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the age of the fulness of Christ."¹ To this living hierarchy he expressly attributes preservation from doctrinal error, proceeding thus: "That henceforth we be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the wickedness of men, by cunning craftiness by which they lie in wait to deceive." And, secondly, this hierarchy itself was knitted and gathered up into a monarchy, and its whole force and solidity made to depend on association with Peter, to whom alone was said, "But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not;" to whom alone was enjoined, "And thou, in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren."

¹ Passaglia, p. 547.

² Ibid., p. 571.

³ For which see hereafter, Ch. VII.

II. Accordingly the pre-eminence of Peter is well expressed by the words,² "Primacy of faith," "chiefship of faith," "chiefship in the episcopate of faith," meaning thereby a peculiar authority to prescribe the faith and determine its profession, and so protect its unity and purity. This is conveyed in the words of Christ, Confirm thy brethren. Thus St Bernard³ addressed Innocent II, "All emergent dangers and scandals in the kingdom of God, specially those which concern the faith, are to be referred to your Apostolate. For I conceive that we should look especially for reparation of the faith to the spot where faith *cannot*¹ fail. That indeed is the prerogative of his see. For to whom else was it once said, 'I have prayed for thee, Peter, that thy faith fail not'? Therefore what follows is required of Peter's successor: 'And thou, in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren.' And this is now necessary. It is time for you, most loving father, to recognize your chiefship, to approve your zeal, and so make your ministry honoured. In that you clearly fulfil the part of Peter, whose seat you occupy, if by your admonition you confirm hearts fluctuating in faith, if by your authority you crush those who corrupt it."

¹ Eph. iv 11.

² Petrus uti audivit, vos autem quid me dicitis? Statim loci non immemor sui primatum egit; primatum confessionis utique, non honoris; primatum fidei, non ordinis.—Ambros. de Incarn., c. 4, n. 32, tom. 2, p. 710

³ Ep. 190, vol. 1, p. 649.

III. All who have received the ministry of the word, and the charge of defending the faith and preserving unity, and are "ambassadors in Christ's name," have a claim to be listened to, but he above all who holds the chiefship of faith, and who received the charge, "Confirm thy brethren." He therefore must be the supreme standard of faith, which is just what St Peter Chrysologus, in the fifth century, wrote to Eutyches: "We exhort you in all things, honourable brother, to pay obedience to what is written by the most blessed Pope of the Roman city; for St Peter, who both lives and rules in his own see, grants to those who ask for it the truth of faith."²

¹ St Cyprian in the third century, uses the same expression. Ep. 55.

² Twenty-fifth letter among those of St Leo.

IV. And in this prerogative of Peter, to be heard above all others, we find the meaning of certain ancient expressions. Thus Prudentius calls him, “the first disciple of God”;¹ St Augustine, “the figure of the Church”;² St Chrysostom, “the mouthpiece of the disciples, and teacher of the world”;³ St Ephrem Syrus, “the candle, the tongue of the disciples, and the voice of preachers”;⁴ St Cyril of Jerusalem, “the prince of the Apostles, and the highest preacher of the Church.”⁵ In these and such-like continually recurring expressions we recognize his chiefship in the episcopate of faith, his being the standard of faith, and his representing the Catholic faith, as the branches are gathered up in the root, and the streamlets in the fountain.

V. Our Lord⁶ has most solemnly declared, and St Paul repeated, that no one shall be saved without maintaining the true and uncorrupt faith. Of this Peter’s faith is the standard and exemplar. Accordingly, by the law of Christ, unity with the faith of Peter is necessary to salvation. This law our Lord set forth in the words, “Confirm thy brethren.” And to this the Fathers in their expressions above quoted allude.

VI. The true faith and the true Church are so indivisibly united, that they cannot even be conceived apart from each other, faith being to the Church as

¹ Con. Symmachum, lib. 2, v. 1.

² Sermon 76.

³ Hom. 88 on John.

⁴ Encom. in Petrum et cæteros Apostolos.

⁵ Cat. xi, n. 3: Ὁ πρωτοστάτης τῶν Ἀποστόλων καὶ τῆς ἐκκλησίας κορυφαῖος κήρυξ.

⁶ Mark xvi 16; John iii 18; Rom. iii 3, etc.

light to the sun. But the true faith neither is nor can be other than that which Peter, “the first disciple of God,” “the teacher of the world,” “the mouthpiece of the disciples,” and “the confirmer of his brethren,” holds and proposes to others. No communion, therefore, called after Christ, which yet differs from that faith can claim either the name or dignity of the true Church.

VII. If any knowledge have a special value, it is surely that by which we have a safe and ready test of the true faith and the true Church. It is of the utmost necessity to know and embrace both, and the means of reaching them are proportionably valuable. Now that test abides in Peter, by keeping which before us we can neither miss the true faith nor the true Church. For no other true faith can there be than that which he delivers who received the charge of confirming his brethren, nor other true Church than what Christ built, and is building still. Hence the expression of St Ambrose, “Where Peter is, there is the Church”;¹ and of Stephen of Larissa, to Pope Boniface II (A.D. 530), “that all the Churches of the world rest in the confession of Peter.”²

VIII. With all these agrees that famous and most early testimony of St Cyprian, that men “fall away from the Church into heresy and schism so long as there is no regard to the source of truth, no looking to the head, nor keeping to the doctrine of our heavenly Master. If any one consider and weigh this, he will not need length of comment or argument. It is easy to offer proofs to a faithful mind, because in that case the truth may be quickly stated.”¹ And then he quotes our Lord’s words to Peter, Matt. xvi 16, and John xxi 17, adding, “ upon him being one he builds his church.” Therefore that Church can neither be torn from the one on whom she is built, nor profess any other faith, save what that one, who is Peter, proposes.

¹ Ambros. in Ps. 1, n. 30.

² Mansi, tom. viii 746.

¹ De Unitate Ecclesiæ, 3.

CHAPTER III

THE INVESTITURE OF PETER

OUR Lord has hitherto, while on earth,¹ ruled as its visible head that body of disciples which he had chosen out of the world, and which his Father had given him. And this body he for the first time called the Church in that famous prophecy² wherein he named the person, who, by virtue of an intimate association with himself, the Rock, should be its foundation. Its duration until the consummation of the world, he pronounced at the same time, in spite of all the rage of "spiritual wickedness in high places" against it, because it was to be founded upon the rock which he should lay.

Secondly, he had, at that period of his ministry when he thought it meet, the second year, selected out of the rest of his disciples, after ascending into a mountain and continuing the night long in prayer, twelve whom he named Apostles—as before and above all sent by him. "He called whom he would himself, and they came to him." To them "he gave authority over unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal every disease and every weakness." He chose them also "to be with him," his personal friends, "and he sent them to preach." To them, moreover, he subsequently made a promise that whatever they should bind on earth should be bound in heaven, and whatever they should loose on earth should be loosed in heaven.¹

¹ Passaglia, p. 93.

² Matt. xvi 16.

Thirdly, as at a certain time in his ministry, that is the second year, he had selected twelve to be nearer his person than the rest of his disciples, so at a yet later time, the third year of his ministry, he had set apart one out of the twelve, to whom from the very first, and before either he, or any one, had been called to be an Apostle, or even, as it would seem, a disciple, he had given a prophetic name. By word and deed, in correspondence with that name, he designated Peter to be the future rock of his Church, to be the bearer of the keys, which opened or shut the entrance to his mystical Holy City, to be endued with power singly to bind and to loose. Finally, on the very eve of his being taken away from his disciples, he pointed out Peter as the future "First one," "Greater one," or "Ruler," among them, having, as such, had given to him a special and singular charge, after the departure of the Head, to "confirm his brethren."

It is manifest that this was all which, before his offering himself up for the sin of the world, and the withdrawal of his visible presence thereupon ensuing, he could do for the government of his Church. For as long as he was there, the Son of Man among men, seen, felt, touched, and handled, the sacred voice in their ears, and the divine eyes gazing bodily upon them, he was not only the fountain of all headship and rule, but he exercised in his own person the highest functions of that headship and visible rule. He daily encouraged, warned, corrected, taught, united them; in short, to use his own words, "while he was with them, he kept them in his Father's name."¹

¹ Matt. x 1; Mark iii 13-15; Luke vi 12, 13; Matt. xviii 18.

But now another time, and other dangers were approaching. The sword was drawn which should "strike the shepherd," there was a fear that "the sheep would be scattered," not only for a moment, but for ever. To meet this the care of the Divine Guardian was necessary in a further disposition of those powers which he received at his resurrection from the dead. For henceforth his visits, as of a risen King, were to be few and sudden, when he pleased, and at times they expected not, "for forty days appearing to them and speaking of the kingdom of God," and as soon as his final injunctions had been thus royally given, "the heavens were to receive him till the time of the restoration of all things." The Apostles could no longer "be with him," as before, nor he "keep them," as in the days of his flesh.

How, then, does he complete the ministerial hierarchy which sprung from his own divine person on earth, and which is to rule his Church and represent that person from his first to his second coming?

Now, first, we must remark, that while great care is taken to make known to all the Apostles the resurrection of the Lord, yet a special solicitude is shown with regard to that one who was to be "the Ruler." Thus the angels, announcing the fact to the holy women at the sepulchre, "He is risen, he is not here, behold the place where they laid him," add, "but go, tell his disciples and Peter, that he goeth before you into Galilee.”¹ The expression indicates his superior place, as when Peter, himself delivered from prison, recounted to the disciples at the house of Mark his escape, and added, “Tell these things to James and to the brethren,” where no one fails to see the pre-eminence given to James by such a mention of him, that Apostle being the Bishop of Jerusalem and so put over the brethren, and, with himself, one of those who “seemed to be pillars.” Again, to Peter our Lord appeared first among the Apostles. St Paul, exhibiting a sort of sum of Christian doctrine, as he says “the Gospel which I preached unto you,” begins, “I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures, and that he was seen by Cephas, and after that by the eleven.” By him alone first, then by them in conjunction with him. And further, St Paul’s words seem to express a sort of descending ratio, “Then was he seen by more than five hundred brethren at once, of whom many remain until this present, and some are fallen asleep. After that he was seen by James, then by all the Apostles. And last of all he was seen also by me, as by one born out of due time. For I am the least of the Apostles.”² And while they were yet in doubt, and for joy could not receive the marvellous tidings when brought by the women, as soon as our Lord appeared to Peter their hesitation was removed, and the two disciples returning from Emmaus—themselves full of his wonderful conversation with them—

¹ John xvii 12.

¹ Mark xvi 6.

² I Cor. xv 1-9.

“found the eleven gathered together and those that were with them, saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.” This the Church in her exultation repeats, where philologists tell us that the Greek and bears what is often the Hebrew meaning, and signifies “for,” as if no doubt could remain any longer of their happiness, when Peter had become a witness of it.

These are indications of superiority, slight perhaps in themselves if they stood alone, but not slight as bearing tacit witness to a fact otherwise resting on its own explicit evidence. If one of the Apostles was destined to be the head of the rest, this is what we should have expected to happen to that one, and this did happen to Peter, who is elsewhere made the head of the Apostles.

But now we come to those most important injunctions which our Lord gave to his Apostles after his Resurrection, concerning the government of his Church. And here it becomes necessary to mark with the utmost accuracy what he said and what he gave to all the Apostles in common, and what to Peter in particular.

First of all, then, we may remark our Lord's care to redeem the promises which he had made to the Twelve, and to convey to them their legislative, judicial, and executive powers. These are mentioned by each of the four Evangelists, in somewhat different terms, but alike involving the distinctive Apostolic powers of immediate institution by Christ, and universal mission; as Apostles they are sent, and they are sent by Christ. The form recorded in St Matthew is, “All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore, and make disciples all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and behold I am with you all days, even to the consummation of the world.”

The form of St Mark is, “Go ye into the whole world, and preach the Gospel to every creature.”

St Luke refers specially in two passages to the descent of the Holy Ghost, as being himself as well the divine “Gift,” and the immediate worker of all graces in man, as the principle of the ecclesiastical hierarchy. “And I send the promise of my Father upon you, but stay you in the city till you be endued with power from on high.” And again, “Eating together with them, he commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but should wait for the promise of the Father, which you have heard,” saith he, “by my mouth; for John, indeed, baptized with water, but you shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence.” “You shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and you shall be witnesses unto me in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and Samaria, and even to the uttermost part of the earth.”

The form recorded by St John is, “As the Father hath sent me, I also send you. When he had said this, he breathed on them; and he said to them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost; whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them; and whose sins you shall retain, they are retained.”¹

¹ Matt. xxviii 18; Mark xvi 15; Luke xxiv 49; Acts i 4-8; John xx 21.

Now, it may be remarked that these passages of the several Evangelists are identical in their force; that is, they each convey all those powers which constitute the Apostolate. These are received by all the Apostles in common, and together; and in the joint possession of them consists that equality which is often attributed by the ancient writers to the Apostles, as notably by St Cyprian. "He gives to all the Apostles an equal power, and says, 'As the Father sent me, I also send you.'" And again, "Certainly, the other Apostles also were what Peter was, endued with an equal fellowship, both of honour and power."¹

And these Apostolic powers, legislative, judicial, and executive, are afterwards referred to as exercised. Thus, in Acts xv, the first council passes decrees which bind the Church; nay, which go forth in the joint name of the Holy Ghost and the Rulers of the Church: "It hath seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us." These powers are delivered by St Paul to the cities to be kept (Acts xvi 4). Again, in Acts xx 28, Bishops are charged to rule the Church, each over his flock, wherein the Holy Ghost has placed him. In 1 Cor. v 1-5 St Paul, "in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," excommunicates, and in 2 Cor. x 6 he sets forth his Apostolic power. In the Epistles to Titus and Timothy he sets them in authority, enjoins them to ordain priests in every city, and commands them to "reprove," or "rebuke."

And all these powers St Peter, of course, as one of the Twelve, had received in common with the rest. The limit to them would seem to lie in their being shared by twelve; as, for instance, universal mission dwelling in such a body must practically be determined and limited somehow to the different members of that body, or one would interfere with the other. But there is nothing in these powers which answers to the images of "the rock," on which the Church is built, the single "bearer of the keys," and "confirmer" of his brethren, which Christ had appropriated to one Apostle.

¹ De Unitate Ecclesiæ, 3.

In like manner, then, as our Lord fulfilled his promises to the Twelve, so did he those to St Peter, and we find written the committal of an authority to him exactly answering to these images. This authority expresses the full legislative, judicial, and executive power of the head, which can be executed by one alone at a time, and is of its own nature supreme, and responsible to none save God. It remained for our Lord to find an image setting forth all this as decisively as that of the Rock, the Bearer of the keys, and the Confirmer of his brethren.

Once, as he passed along the shores of the lake of Galilee, he had seen two fishermen casting their net into the sea, and had "said to them, Come after me, and I will make you fishers of men, and immediately leaving their nets, they followed him." Once again, too, he had gone into the ship of that same fisherman, and sitting, taught the multitudes out of it. And then he bade that fisherman, "who had laboured all the night and taken nothing, to launch out into the deep," and in faith "let down his nets for a draught," whereupon "he enclosed so great a multitude of fishes that the net brake."¹ And again, in after times, when the fisherman had become an Apostle, that same ship waited on his convenience, and carried him across the lake. It was there he was asleep when the storm raged, and his disciples in little faith awoke him, saying, "Master, save us, we perish," not yet knowing that the ship which carried the Lord might be tost, but could not sink.¹ From it they beheld him walking on the sea, in the fourth watch of the night, when Peter, in his fervour, desired to join him, and going to meet his Lord on the waves, his faith failed him, and he began to sink, till the Almighty hand supported him, and drew him with it to the ship, which "presently was at the land to which they were going."² And now, Peter, and Thomas, and Nathaniel, and the sons of Zebedee, and two others, were once more on that same ship and sea, but no longer with him who had commanded the winds, and walked on the waves. Once more, too, they³ toiled all the night, and "caught nothing"; when, lo, in the morning light, Jesus stood on the shore, but yet unknown to them, and bade them cast the net on the right side of the ship, "and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes." Thus he revealed himself to them, and invited them to eat with him of the fishes which they had caught. "Then Simon Peter went up, and drew the net to land, full of great fishes, one hundred and fifty-three. And although there were so many, the net was not broken:" for, indeed, that draught of great fishes, gathered by Peter at Christ's command, betokened God's elect, whom the Church is to gather out of the sea of this world, who cannot break from the net, which net, therefore, Peter drew to land, even the everlasting shore whereon Christ welcomes his own. And after that marvellous banquet of the disciples with their Lord, betokening the never-ending marriage-feast, wherein "the roasted fish is Christ in His passion,"¹ our Lord proceeds to crown all that series of distinctions, wherewith, since imposing the prophetic name, he had marked out Simon, the son of Jonas, to be the Leader of his disciples. Thus he fulfils by the side of the lake of Galilee what he foreshadowed when he first looked upon Peter, what he promised in the quarters of Cesarea Philippi, and what he repeated on the eve of his passion.

¹ Mark i 16; Luke v 3.

¹ Mark iv 38; Luke viii 24.

² John vi 21.

³ John xxi 1-14.

It was his will to appoint one to take his place on earth. Now he had assumed to himself specially a particular title under which of old time his prophets had foretold his advent among men, and which above all others expressed his tender love for fallen man. It had been said of him, "I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David: he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd." And again, "Say to the cities of Juda, behold your God. . . . He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather together the lambs with his arm, and shall take them up in his bosom, and he himself shall carry them that are with young." And, once more, in the very prophecy by which the chief priests and scribes declared to Herod that he must be born at Bethlehem, "For from thee shall go forth the Ruler, who shall feed (or shepherd) my people Israel." Appropriating these predictions to himself, the Lord had said, "I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep. And other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."¹ And now it was his pleasure to give this particular title, so specially his own, to Peter, and to Peter alone, and to Peter in most marked contrast even with the best-beloved of his other disciples, and to Peter, thrice repeating the charge, and varying the expression of it so as to include the term in its utmost force. "When, therefore, they had dined, Jesus said to Simon Peter, Simon, son of John, lovest thou me more than these? He saith to him, Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. He saith to him, Feed my lambs. He saith to him again, Simon, son of John, lovest thou me? He saith to him, Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee. He saith to him, Feed my lambs. He saith to him the third time, Simon, son of John, lovest thou me? Peter was grieved because he had said to him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said to him, Lord, thou knowest all things: thou knowest that I love thee. He said to him, Feed my sheep."

¹ St Aug. in Joan. cxxii. "Piscis assus Christus est passus."

Our Lord had before addressed the seven disciples present in common, "Children, have you any meat?" "Cast the net, and you shall find." "Bring hither of the fishes which you have caught." "Come and dine." But now, turning to one in particular, he singles him out in the most special manner, by his name, by asking of him a love greater than that of any other towards himself, by conferring on him a charge, which, as we shall see, from its extension excludes its being held in joint possession by any other, and by a prophecy concerning the manner of his death, which is wholly particular to Peter. If it is possible by any words to convey a power and a charge to a particular person, and to exclude the rest of the company from that special power and charge, it is done here.

¹ Ezech. xxiv 33; Isa. xl 9-11; Mich. v 2; Matt. ii 6; John x 11, 14, 16.

But, secondly, it is a charge of a very high and distinguishing nature indeed, for our Lord before conferring it demands of Peter, as a condition, greater love towards his own person than that felt for him by any of the Twelve—even by the sons of Zebedee, whom from their zeal he surnamed Boanerges, sons of thunder—even by the disciple whom he loved, and who lay on his breast at the Last Supper. What must that charge be, the preliminary condition for which is a greater love for Jesus than that of the beloved disciple? What shall be a fitting sequel to “Simon, son of John, lovest thou me more than these?” What, again, the importance of that office, in bestowing which our Lord thrice repeats the condition, and thrice inculcates the charge? The words of God are not spoken at random, nor his repetitions without effect. What, again, are the subjects of the charge? They are “my lambs,” and “my sheep”; that is, the fold itself of the Great Shepherd. As he said, “If I wash thee not, thou shalt have no part with me,” so those who are not either his lambs or his sheep form no part of his fold. Others, too, in Holy Writ, are addressed as shepherds, but with a limitation, as, “Take heed to the whole flock wherein the Holy Ghost hath placed you bishops," or "Feed the flock of God which is among you." And, more emphatically it was said, "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples all nations"; and "Go ye into the whole world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."¹ But they to whom this was said were yet themselves sheep of the Great Shepherd, and in committing the world to them, he did not commit them to each other. Whereas here, they too, as his sheep, are committed to one, even Peter; and very expressly, in the persons of James and John, and the rest present, "Lovest thou me more than these?" A particular flock is never termed absolutely and simply "the flock," or "the flock of God," but "the flock which is among you," "in which the Holy Ghost hath made you bishops." And again, the Apostles are sent in common to the whole world, to preach to all nations, and to form one flock; but they are twelve, and "power given to several carries its restriction in its division, whilst power given to one alone and over all, and without exception, carries with it plenitude, and not having to be divided with any other, it has no bounds save those which its terms convey."² What are the terms here? "Feed," and "be shepherd over" or "rule" "my lambs and my sheep." The terms have no limit, save that of salvation itself. Such, then, are the persons indicated as subjects of this charge. But what is the nature of the charge? Two different words of unequal extent and force in the original, but both rendered "feed" in the translation, convey this.

¹ Acts xx 28; 1 Pet. v 10; Matt. xxviii 19; Mark xvi 15.

² Bossuet, Sermon sur l'Unité.

One means “to give food” simply, the other, of far higher and nobler reach, embraces every act of care and providence in the government of others, under an image the farthest removed from the spirit of pride and ambition. Such is even its heathen meaning, and the first of poets termed Agamemnon by this word, “Shepherd of the people.” By this word, St Paul and St Peter¹ himself express the power of the bishop over his own flock. And so our Lord, here instituting the Bishop of bishops, the one Shepherd of the one fold, gives to Peter over all his flock the very word given to him in the famous prophecy, “Thou, Bethlehem, the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come forth the captain that shall rule my people Israel. This very word used of himself in Psalm ii to express all his power and dominion, in his revelation to St John is spoken of his own triumphant career, as the Word of God going forth to battle, “He shall rule them with a rod of iron.” Again, in the same book, it is applied by himself to set forth the honour which he will give “to him that shall overcome and keep my works unto the end.”² Thus, just as in the persons pointed out, the subject of this charge is universal, so in the terms by which it is expressed, the nature of the power is supreme. What the bishop is to his own flock, Peter is made to “the flock of God”: and this at once, in the most simple, as well as in the most absolute and emphatic manner, by institution from the Chief Shepherd himself, at the close of his ministry, and by associating Peter singly with himself in his most distinctive title. If the fold of Christ is equivalent to "the Church of Christ," and "the kingdom of heaven," so to feed and to rule the lambs and the sheep of that fold is equivalent to being "the Rock" of that Church, and "the Bearer of the keys," as well as the First, the Greater one, and the Ruler in that kingdom of heaven.

¹ Acts xx 28; 1 Pet. v 10; Ps. ii 9; Apoc. xix 15, ii 27.

² Ποιμαίνεω used in the text of John, and in all these.

Again, looking at the circumstances under which this charge is received by Peter, it either conveys that special and singular honour and power which we have here set forth, or none at all. For Peter had already received the full Apostolic authority: he had heard together with the rest of the Apostles those words of power, "As my Father sent me, I also send you," and the charge following, to bind and to loose. It could not therefore be this power which was here given him, for he had it already. All which James and John, the sons of thunder, ever had given them, he also had before these words were uttered. Besides, a power which was to be shared by James and John, and the rest of the Apostles, could not be given in terms which distinguished him from them, "Lovest thou me more than these?" It could not be the mere forgiveness of his denial, for not only did the Apostolate, since conferred, carry that, but when our Lord appeared to him first of all the Apostles after his Resurrection, it was a token of such forgiveness. There remained nothing else to give him but a presidency over the Apostles themselves, the reward of superior love, as was prophesied and promised to him in reward for superior faith. For these two oracles of our Lord exactly correspond to each other as promise and performance. Their conditions and their terms shed a reciprocal light on each other. In the one there is the great confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"; in the other as singular a declaration, "Lovest thou me more than these? Yea, Lord." In the one there follows the reward, "And I say to thee, that thou art Peter," etc.; and in the other a like reward, "Feed my lambs, be shepherd over my sheep." The one is future, "I will build, I will give, thou shalt bind, thou shalt loose"; the other present, "Feed, and be shepherd." What concerns "the Church and the kingdom of heaven" in the one, concerns "the fold" in the other. And the promise and performance are singularly restricted to Peter—"I say unto thee, thou art Peter"—"Simon, son of John, lovest thou me more than these?"

And then Peter received the promise of the supreme episcopate before all and by himself, under the terms that he should be the Rock, by being built on which the Church should never fall, that he should be the Bearer of the keys in the kingdom of heaven, and that singly he should bind and loose in heaven and on earth. Thus, after his own Apostolate and that of the rest had been completed, by himself, and as the crown of the divine work, he received the fulfilment of that supreme episcopate, under the terms, "Feed my lambs, be shepherd over my sheep." And as a part out of that magnificent promise made to him singly was afterwards taken and made to the Apostles jointly with him, for so "it was the design of Jesus Christ to put first in one alone what afterwards he meant to put in several; but the sequel does not reverse the beginning, nor the first lose his place. That first word, ‘ whatsoever thou shalt bind,’ said to one alone, has already ranged under his power each one of those to whom shall be said, ‘ Whatsoever ye shall remit ’; for the promises of Jesus Christ, as well as his gifts, are without repentance; and what is once given indefinitely and universally is irrevocable.”¹ When Peter and the rest already possessed the whole Apostolate, that is, the commission to go and preach to the whole world, and to make disciples of all nations, a power was added to Peter to make up what was promised to him originally; the Apostles themselves, with the whole fold, were put under his charge; he represented the person of the Great Shepherd: and the divine work was complete.

Thus the powers of the Apostolate and the Primacy are not antagonistic, but fit into and harmonize with each other. In the college of the Twelve, as before inaugurated, and sent forth into the whole world, something would have been wanting, had not “ the appointment of a head removed the chance of schism”:² and Satan would have shaken the whole fabric had there not been one divinely set to “ confirm the brethren.” He who “ kept them ” once, when “ with them,” by his personal presence, now kept them for evermore by the word of his power, issued on the shore of the lake of Galilee, but resounding through every age, clear and decisive, amid the fall of empires and the change of races—“ Simon, son of John, lovest thou me more than these? Feed my lambs: Feed my sheep.”

¹ Bossuet, Sermon sur l'Unité,

² St. Jerome.

And that the universal and supreme authority over the Church of Christ was in these words committed to Peter by the Lord, is the belief of antiquity. Thus, St Ambrose, in the West: “It is not doubtful that Peter believed, and believed because he loved, and loved because he believed. Whence, too, he is grieved at being asked a third time, Lovest thou me? For we ask those of whom we doubt. The Lord does not doubt, and he asks not to learn, but to teach him whom, on the point of ascending into heaven, he was leaving, *as it were, the successor and representative of his love.*¹ It is because he alone out of all makes a profession, that he is preferred to all. Lastly, for the third time, the Lord asks him, no longer hast thou a regard (diligis me) for me, but lovest (amas) thou me: and now he is ordered to feed, not the lambs, as at first, who need a milk diet, nor the little sheep, as secondly, but the more perfect sheep, in order that he who was the more perfect might have the government.”² In the East, St Chrysostom: “Why, then, passing by the rest, does he converse with him on these things? He was the chosen of the Apostles, and the mouthpiece of the disciples, and the head of the band. Therefore, also Paul once went up to see him rather than the rest. It was, besides, to show him that for the future he must be bold, as his denial was done away with, that He puts into his hands the presidency over the brethren. And he does not mention the denial, nor reproach him with what had passed; but he says, If thou lovest me,

¹ Amoris sui veluti vicarium.

² In Lucam, lib. 10, n. 175.

rule the brethren, and show now that warm affection which on all occasions thou didst exhibit, and in which thou didst exult, and the life which thou didst offer to lay down for me, now spend for my sheep.” Again, “Thrice he asks the question, and thrice lays on him the same command, showing at how high a price he sets the charge of his own sheep.” Again, “He was put in charge with the direction of his brethren.” “He made him great promises, and put the world into his hands.” Thus John and James, and the rest of the Apostles, were committed to Peter, but never Peter to them: and he adds, “But if any one asks, How then did James receive the throne of Jerusalem? I would reply that he elected Peter not to be the teacher of this throne, but of the whole world.” And in another place, “Why did he shed his blood to purchase those sheep which he committed to Peter and his successors? With reason then said Christ, ‘Who is the faithful and prudent servant whom his Lord had set over his own¹ house?’” Theophylact repeated, seven hundred years later, the perpetual tradition of the East: “He puts into Peter’s hands the headship over the sheep of the whole world, and to no other but to him gives he this; first, because he was distinguished above all, and the mouthpiece of the whole band; and secondly, showing to him that he must be confident, as his denial was put out of account.” Pope St Leo declares that “though there be among the people of God many priests and many shepherds, yet Peter rules all by immediate commission, whom Christ also rules by sovereign power.”¹ St Basil assigned an adequate reason for this nearly a century before. He viewed all pastoral authority in the Church as included in this grant to Peter, declaring that the spiritual “ ruler is alone the one who represents the person of the Saviour, and offers up to God the salvation of those who obey him, and this we learn from Christ Himself in that he appointed Peter to be the shepherd of his Church after himself.”²

¹ St Chrys. in Joan. Hom. 88, pp. 525-527; and De Sacerdot., lib. 2, tom. i, p. 372.

But especially must we quote St Cyprian, because to that equality of the Apostles as such, before referred to by us, by considering which without regard to the proportion of faith some have been led astray, he adds the full recognition of the Primacy, and urges its extreme importance. Thus quoting the promise and the fulfilment, “ Thou art Peter,” etc., and “ Feed my sheep,” he goes on, “ Upon him being one he builds his Church; and though he gives to all the Apostles an equal power, and says, ‘ As the Father sent me, I also send you,’ etc., yet in order to manifest unity he has, by his own authority, so placed the source of the same unity as to begin from one. Certainly the other Apostles also were what Peter was, endued with an equal fellowship both of honour and power, but a beginning is made from unity, that the Church may be set before us as one.”³ That is, the Apostles were equal as to the powers bestowed in John xx 23-25, but as to those given in Matt. xvi 18, 19, Luke xxii 31-33, and John xxi 15-18, “ the Church was built upon

¹ St Leo, Serm. 4.

² St Basil, Constit. Monas. xxii, tom. ii, p. 573.

³ St Cyprian, de Unit. 3.

Peter alone," and he was made the source and ever-living spring of ecclesiastical unity.

Yet clearly as our Lord in this charge associates Peter with himself, puts him over his brethren, the other Apostles, by that one title of "the Shepherd," in which is summed up all authority over his Church, still a touch of tenderness is added by the Master's hand, which brings out all this more forcibly, and must have told personally on Peter's feelings and those of his fellow-disciples, as the highest and most solemn consecration to his singular office. For when the Lord spoke that parable, "I am the good shepherd," he added, as the token of the character, "The good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep." And so now, appointing Peter to take his place over the flock, he adds to him this token also: "Amen, amen, I say to thee, When thou wast younger thou didst gird thyself, and didst walk where thou wouldst, but when thou shalt be old, thou shalt stretch forth thy hands, and another shall gird thee, and lead thee whither thou wouldst not." "When thou wast younger, thou didst gird thyself," alluding, perhaps, to that impulse of affection with which, just before, as soon as Peter heard from John that it was the Lord standing on the shore, "He girt his coat about him and cast himself into the sea," for his love waited not for the slowness of the boat. Thus he taught Peter that the chiefship to which he was appointing him, that "care of all the churches," as it required a different spirit to fulfil it from that which prevailed among "the kings of the nations," so it led to a different end. The last crowning act of a lifelong self-sacrifice, which began by being the servant of all, ran through a thousand acts of humiliation and anxiety, was to the martyrdom of crucifixion. And so in his death, as well as in his charge of visible head of the Church, he was to be made like his Lord, and after the manner of the Good Shepherd, whom he succeeded, should lay down his life for his sheep. For "this he said signifying by what death he should glorify God. And when he had said this, he saith to him, Follow me," with far deeper meaning now than when those words of power were first uttered to him beside that lake. Then it was "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men." Now it is, "Follow me, and I will associate thee with my life and with my death, with my charge and with its reward. This shall be the proof of thy great love, to be obedient even to death, and that the death of the cross." Such was the anointing which the first Primate of the Church received to the triple crown. "Follow thou me." Like his divine Master, he was during the whole of his ministry to have the cross set before his eyes, and laid upon his heart as the certain end of his course. And thus Peter "received power and sacerdotal authority over all, from the very God for our sakes incarnate":¹ thus he followed in the steps of the Good Shepherd, as he succeeded to his office. And therefore, having accomplished his mission and triumphed on the Roman hill, from Rome he speaks through the undying line of his spiritual heirs, and feeds the flock of Christ.

¹ Stephen of Dora, in the Lateran Synod, A.D. 649. Mansi, x 893.

CHAPTER IV

THE CORRESPONDENCE AND EQUIVALENCE OF THE GREAT TEXTS CONCERNING PETER

BEFORE we compare together more exactly what was said to the Apostles in common, and what to Peter in particular, it is desirable to consider briefly two other points, which will complete the evidence furnished by the Gospels.

1. If, then, the question¹ to be decided by documents is, whether several persons are to be accounted equal in rank, honour, and authority, or whether one of them is superior to the rest, it will be an unexceptionable rule to observe whether they are spoken of in the same manner. For words are signs of ideas, and set forth as in a mirror the mind's conceptions. A similarity of language, therefore, will indicate a similarity of rank; a distinction of language, especially if it be repeated and constant, will show a like distinction of rank. Let us apply this rule to the mode in which the Evangelists speak of Peter and of the other Apostles.

Now, to express one of rank and his attendants, the Evangelists often use the phrase, a person and those with him. Thus Luke vi 4, "David and those that were with him "; and Matt. xii 3 with Mark ii 25, "Have ye not read what David did when himself was an hungered and those that were with him ?" Of our Lord and the Apostles it is said, Mark iii 11, "And he made twelve, that they should be with him"; and xvi 10, "She went and told them that had been with him." And Acts iv 13, the chief priests "knew them," Peter and John, "that they had been with Jesus." And Matthew xxvi 69, Peter is reproached, "Thou also wast with Jesus." Now, just so the Evangelists speak of Peter. Our Lord having on one occasion left the Apostles for solitary prayer, St Mark writes i 36, "And Simon and they that were with him followed after him." Again, the woman with the issue of blood having touched the Lord when he asked, "Who is it that touched me?" St Luke says, viii 45, "all denying, Peter and they that were with him said," etc. And on the occasion of the Transfiguration, "Peter and they that were with him," being James and John. Just as after the Resurrection Luke writes, Acts ii 14, "Peter standing up with the eleven"; verse 37, "They said to Peter and to the rest of the Apostles"; v 29, "Peter and the Apostles answering said." And the angels to the holy women, Mark xvi 7, "Go tell his disciples and Peter."

¹ Passaglia, p. 106.

It is then to be remarked that Peter is the only Apostle who is put in this relation to the rest. Never is it said "James," or "John and the rest of the Apostles," or, "and those with him." Peter is named, and the rest are added in a mass, and this happens in his case continually, never in the case of any other Apostle.

No adequate cause can be alleged for this but the Primacy and superior rank of Peter, which was ever in the mind of the Evangelist, and is sometimes in-indicated by the prophetic name, for as often as Simon is called Peter, he is marked as the foundation of the Church, according to the Lord's prophecy. And long before contentions about the prerogatives of Peter arose, the ancient Fathers attributed it to his Primacy that he was thus named expressly and first, the others in a mass, or in the second place.

According, then, to the rule above-mentioned, Peter, by the mode in which the Evangelists speak of him, is distinguished from the other Apostles, and his position with regard to the rest is described in the very same phrase which is used to express the superiority of David over his men, and even of our Lord over the Twelve. And for this there seems no adequate cause but that special association of Peter with himself indicated in the name, and the promises accompanying it in Matt. xvi.

2. Again, four¹ catalogues of the Apostles exist,² and in each of these Peter is placed first. And in the three which occur in the Gospels (that of Luke in the Acts being a more brief repetition of his former one) the prophetic name Peter is indicated as the reason for his being thus placed first. So Mark: "And to Simon he gave the name Peter. And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and he named them Boanerges, which is the sons of thunder:" for which reason, that the Lord had given them a name, though it was held in common, and not, like that of Peter, expressive of official rank, but personal qualities, Mark seems to set these two before Andrew, whom

¹ Passaglia, p. 109.

Matt. x 2-5; Mark iii 16-19; Luke vi 14-17; Acts i 13.

both in Matthew and in Luke they follow. Again, Luke says, "He chose twelve of them, whom also He named Apostles, Simon whom he surnamed Peter, and Andrew his brother," etc. "The first of all, and the chief of them, he that was illiterate and uneducated," says St Chrysostom;¹ and Origen long before him, observing that Peter was always named first in the number of the Twelve, asks, What should be thought the cause of this order? He replies, it was constantly observed because Peter was "more honoured than the rest," thus intimating that he no less excelled the rest on account of the gifts which he had received from heaven, than "Judas through his wretched disposition was truly the last of all, and worthy to be put at the end."² Much more marked is Matthew in signifying the superior dignity of Peter, not only naming him at the head in his catalogue, but calling him simply and absolutely "the first." "And the names of the Twelve apostles are these, The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother, James," etc. Now, that second and third do not follow shows that "first" is not a numeral here, but designates rank and pre-eminence. Thus in heathen authors this word "first" by itself designates the most excellent in its kind: thus in the Septuagint occur, "first friend of the king," "first of the singers," "the first priest"³—i.e., the chief priest. So our Lord, "whichever among you will be first;" "Bring forth the first robe;" and St Paul, "sinners, of whom I am first"⁴—i.e., chief. Thus

¹ St Chrysostom in Matt., Hom. 32.

² Origen in Joan., tom. 32, n. 5, t. 4, p. 413.

³ 1 Paral. xxvii 33; Neh. xii 45; 2 Paral. xxvi 20.

⁴ Matt. xx 27; Luke xv 22; 1 Tim. i 15.

“ the first of the island,” Acts xxviii 7, means the chief magistrate; the “ first ” generally in Latin phraseology, the superior, or prince.

Such, then, is the rank which Matthew gives to Peter, when he writes, “ the first Simon, who is called Peter.”

It should also be remarked that, whenever the Evangelists have occasion to mention some of the Apostles, Peter being one, he is ever put first. Thus Matthew, “ he taketh unto him Peter, and James, and John his brother ”; and Mark, “ he admitted not any man to follow him, but Peter, and James, and John the brother of James.” Again, “ Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew asked him apart ”; and “ he taketh Peter, and James, and John with him ”; and Luke, “ he suffered not any man to go in with him, but Peter, and James, and John, and the father and mother of the maiden ”; and “ he sent Peter and John.” Thus, John, “ There were together Simon Peter, and Thomas, who is called Didymus, and Nathanael who was of Cana in Galilee, and the two sons of Zebedee, and two others of his disciples.”¹ This rule would seem to be invariable, though James and John are not always mentioned next after him.

An attempt has been made to evade the force of these testimonies, by giving as a reason for Peter being always thus named first, that he was the most aged of all the Apostles, and the first called. Even were it so, such reasons would seem most inadequate, but unfortunately they are neither of them facts. For as to age, antiquity bears witness that Andrew was Peter's elder brother. And as to their calling, St Augustine has observed, "In what order all the Twelve Apostles were called, does not appear in the narrations of the Evangelists, since not only not the order of the calling, but not even the calling itself of all is mentioned, only the calling of Philip, and Peter, and Andrew, and of the sons of Zebedee, and of Matthew the publican, termed also Levi. Now, Peter was both the first and the only one who separately received a name from him." As it may be conjectured from the Gospels that Christ said to Philip first of all "Follow me," John i 44, he has the best right to be considered the first called.

¹ Matt. xvii 1; Mark v 37, xiii 3, xiv 33; Luke viii 51, xii 8; John xxi 2.

Now the two classes of facts just mentioned, as to the mode in which the Evangelists speak of Peter in combination with the other Apostles, prove directly and plainly his Primacy, while they do not directly prove, save Matthew's title of First, nor are they here quoted to prove, the nature of the Primacy, which rests, as we have seen, on other and more decisive texts.

At length, then, we have before us the whole evidence of the Gospels, and having considered it, piece by piece, may now take a general view. It is time to gather up the several parts of this evidence, and, claiming for each its due force, to present the sum of all before the mind. For distinct and decisive as certain texts appear, and are, even by themselves, yet when they are seen to fit into a whole system, and perfectly to harmonize together, they have much greater power to convince the mind which really seeks for truth. But moral evidence generally, and especially that which results from a study of the Holy Scripture, is not intended to move a mind in a lower condition than this—a mind, that is, which loves something else better than the truth.

¹ De Consensu Evang., lib. ii, c. xvii, n. 39.

Thus, out of the body of his disciples we see our Lord choosing Twelve, and again, out of those Twelve, distinguishing One by the most singular favours. This distinction even begins before the selection of the Twelve, and has its root in the very beginning of our Lord's ministry: for, as we have seen, it was when Andrew first led his brother Simon before Christ, that he "looked upon him," and promised him the prophetic name which revealed his Primacy and his perpetual relation to the Church of God. The name thus promised is in due time bestowed, and solemnly recorded by the three Evangelists, at the appointment of the Apostles, as the reason why he is invariably set at their head; Matthew, still more distinctly expressing it in his Primacy, "the first, Simon, who is called Peter." And their whole mode of mentioning him, and exhibiting his relation to the other Apostles, shows that this Primacy was, when they wrote, ever in their minds. It comes out in the most incidental way, as when Mark writes "Simon, and they that were with him, followed after" Christ; or Luke, "Peter, and they that were with him, said"; as naturally as they write, "David, and those that were with him"; or of our Lord himself, and the Apostles, "those that had been with him."¹ Again this preference of Peter is shown by our Lord, both at the Transfiguration and the Agony: where, even when the two next favoured of the Apostles are associated with him as witnesses, yet there is evidence of Peter's superiority in the mode with which the Evangelists mention him. Great as was the dignity of the two sons of thunder, they are yet ranged under Peter by Luke, with that same phrase which we have just been considering. "Peter, and they that were with him, were heavy with sleep." And our Lord, at the Agony, says to Peter, "Could not you"—that is, all the three—"watch with me one hour?"¹ Again, how incidentally, yet markedly, does Matthew show that this superiority of Peter over others was apparent even to strangers, when he writes, that the officers who collected the tribute for the Temple, came to him, and said, "Does not your Master" (the Master of all the Apostles) "pay the didrachma?"² Much more significant is the incident immediately following, when our Lord orders him to go to the sea, to cast a hook, and to bring up a fish, which shall have a stater in his mouth, adding, "Take that, and give it to them for me, and for thee": a token of preference so strong, and of association so singular, that it set the Apostles on the immediate inquiry, who should be the greater among them: the answer to which we will revert presently.

¹ Mark i 36; Luke viii 45; Matt. xii 3; Mark ii 25, xvi 10.

And this designation of Peter to his high and singular office becomes even more striking, if we contrast what our Lord did and said to him with what he did and said to another Apostle, who in another way is even in some respects preferred to Peter himself. For, "the disciple whom Jesus loved," who lay on his breast at supper, to whom he committed at the most sorrowful of all moments the domestic care of the Virgin Mother, has in the affection of our Lord his own unapproachable sphere. But as Peter does not come into competition with him here, so neither in another view he with Peter. His distinction is private, and in the nature of personal affection: Peter's is public, and in the nature of Church government. To one is committed the Mother of the Lord, the living symbol of the Church, the most blessed of all creatures, and that, when her full dignity and blessedness stood at length revealed in the full Godhead of her Son, yet whose throne was intercessory, apart from rule on earth: to the other is committed the Church herself, her championship in the time of conflict, the rudder of the vessel on the lake, till with Christ it should reach the shore. Each of these, so eminent and unapproachable in his way, has that way apart; and when Peter, on receiving his final commission, turned about and saw his best loved friend following, and ventured to ask, "Lord, and what shall this man do?" our Lord replied with something like a reproof, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." These distinct preferences of the two Apostles were indicated by Tertullian, when he wrote, "Was anything concealed from Peter, who was named the Rock on which the Church should be built, who received the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and the power to bind and loose in heaven and on earth? Was anything, too, concealed from John, the most beloved of the Lord, who lay upon his breast, to whom alone the Lord fore-signified the traitor Judas, whom he committed in his own place as Son to Mary?"¹

¹ Luke ix 32; Matt. xxvi 40.

² Matt. xvii 24.

¹ De Præsc., c. 22.

But to return. Our Lord, after encompassing Peter during his whole ministry with such tokens of preference, and a preference specially belonging to his office, and designating it, appears to him first of all the Apostles after his resurrection. And yet all the proofs which we have been here summing up of Peter's pre-eminence are but collateral and subordinate: though by themselves tenfold more than any other can claim, yet Peter's authority does not rest mainly on them. And this likewise is true of another class of facts concerning Peter, which yet carries with it much force, and when once remarked, never leaves the thoughtful mind. It is his great predominance in the sacred history over the rest of the Twelve. A single incident or expression distinguishing him is perhaps all that falls to the lot of another Apostle, as when "Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father and it sufficeth us"; and the Lord replies, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip?" Or as Thomas, at a moment of danger, "said to his fellow-disciples, Let us also go that we may die with him."¹ But Peter's name is wrought into the whole tissue of the Gospel history; he is perpetually approaching the Lord with questions: "Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? until seven times?" The rest suffer the Lord in silence to wash their feet, but Peter is overcome at the sight. "Lord, dost thou wash my feet? Thou shalt never wash my feet;" "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head."² Thus in the whole New Testament, John, who is yet mentioned oftener than the rest, occurs only thirty-eight times; but in the Gospels alone, omitting the Acts and the Epistles, Peter is mentioned twenty-three times by Matthew, eighteen by Mark, twenty by Luke, and thirty by John.¹ More especially it is the custom of the Evangelists, when they record anything which touches all the Apostles, almost invariably to exhibit Peter as singly speaking for all, and representing all. Thus when Christ asked them all equally, "But whom say ye that I am? Simon Peter answered and said." He told them all equally "That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven,"² whereupon "Peter answering said to him, Behold, we have left all things, and followed thee: what therefore shall we have?" And when "Jesus said to the Twelve, Will you also go away?"³ at once we hear "Simon Peter answered and said, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." And a very remarkable occasion occurs where our Lord had been telling to his disciples the parable of the watchful servant, upon which Peter said to him, "Lord, dost thou speak this parable to us, or likewise to all?"⁴ And the reply seems by anticipation to express the very office which Peter was to hold. "Who, then, is the faithful and wise steward, whom his lord setteth over his family, to give them their measure of wheat in due season?" Now it looks not like an equal, but a superior, to anticipate the rest, to represent them, to speak and act for them. St Chrysostom drew the conclusion long ago. "What, then, says Peter, the mouthpiece of the Apostles?

¹ John xiv 8, xi 16.

² Matt. xviii 21; John xiii 6.

¹ Passaglia, p. 134.

³ John vi 67.

² Matt. xix. 23.

⁴ Luke xii 41.

Everywhere impetuous as he is, the leader of the band of the Apostles, when a question is asked of all, he replies."¹ No other cause can be assigned for the care of the Evangelists in setting before us so continually his words and acts, in bringing him out, as the second object, after Christ. But though his future place in the Church is a reason for this, and this, again, a token of that singular pre-eminence, its decisive proof rests on declarations from our Lord's own mouth, expressly circumscribed to him, of singular lucidity, and of force which nothing can evade. These declarations set forth, under different yet coincident images, a power supreme and without equal, and of its own nature belonging to one alone. The proofs which we have hitherto mentioned take away all abruptness from these declarations, and show that they embody a great design which runs all through the Gospel; but the office itself rests upon these, and by these is most clearly and absolutely defined.

Thus, when our Lord, in answer to a great confession of his Apostle, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," replies, "And I too say unto thee, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church": every one must feel how it adds to the cogency of the reply, that the name, which he is explaining, was not the person's natural name, but first promised, and then given, by that same Lord, who now attaches other promises and prophecies to it. This fact serves, among others, to fix the whole which follows to Peter individually, and to introduce what follows as part of a design which before had been intimated.

¹ In Matt. Hom. 54.

What follows no more belongs to the other Apostles than the name Peter belongs to them: and a name, on the other hand, so promised, and so given, naturally looks, as it were, to such a result. To say solemnly of a man, when first seen, "Thou art called Simon, but thou shalt be called the Rock," and to make nothing of him when so called, would be, if ascribed to any one, a dull and pointless thing; but what shall we say when the speaker is God? It is a new thing for God the Word to speak with little meaning, or to speak and not to do: and so now he does what he had long designed. And what is it that he does? He sets up a governor who is never to be put down. He inaugurates a Church against which hell shall rage in vain: he establishes a government at which the nations shall rage, the kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, for ever, but to their own confusion. He does what he alone could do, and so the answer is worthy of the confession, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."

"Blessed¹ art thou, Simon Bar-Jona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven. And I too say unto thee, in return for what thou hast said to me, and to show, like my Father, my good will towards thee, and what I say, as the Almighty Word of the Father, by my power I fulfil, that thou art Peter, the Rock, and so partaker with me of that honour whereby I am the chief Rock and Foundation; and upon this Rock, which I have called thee, I will build my Church. Therefore, with me for its architect, it shall rest on thee, to thee adhere, and from thee derive its conspicuous unity: and the gates of hell, even all the powers of the enemy, shall not prevail against it, nor take that which, by my Godhead, is established upon thee. And to thee, whom, as Supreme Architect, I have marked out for the Rock and Foundation of my Church, as king and lord I will give the keys of the kingdom of heaven and the supreme authority over my Church, and will make thee sharer with me in that dignity, by which I hold the keys of heaven and of earth. And whatsoever, in virtue of that authority and as associated in my dignity, thou shalt bind upon earth, shall be bound in heaven, and there shall be no matter relating to my Church, and the kingdom of heaven, but shall be subject to thy legislative and judicial power, which shall reach the heaven itself. It is a power at once human and divine; human, as entrusted to a man, and administered by a man; divine, as a participation of that right by which I am, in heaven and on earth, supreme lawgiver and judge; and whatsoever thou shalt loose upon earth shall be loosed in heaven."

¹ Passaglia, p. 510.

Thus it is that the most famous Fathers and Bishops, the most distinguished Councils, the most various nations, have understood our Lord's words, and this is their meaning, according to the fixed laws of grammar, of rhetoric, of philosophy, and of logic, as well as by the testimony of history, and in accordance with the principles of theology. Let us mention certain consequences which follow from them.

These words¹ of Christ are, in the most marked manner, addressed to Peter only among the Apostles, and are, therefore, with their meaning, peculiar to him. And they designate pre-eminence in the government of the Church. They have, therefore, the two qualities which render them a suitable testimony to establish his Primacy among the Apostles.

¹ Passaglia, p. 518.

Now, if persons differ in rank and pre-eminence, they must be considered not equals, but absolutely unequal. And such pre-eminence Peter had, deriving from Christ, the Founder, a superior rank in the Church's ministry. Therefore, the college of the Apostles must be termed absolutely unequal, and all the Apostles, compared with Peter, absolutely unequal.

But as inequality may be manifold, as of age, calling, honour, order, jurisdiction, and power, its nature and its degree must be sought in that property which belongs to one over the rest. So that we must determine, by the authority of the Scriptures, from those gifts which were promised to Peter alone, the nature and the degree of that inequality which subsisted between him and the other Apostles.

The gifts promised to Peter alone are contained in these words of Christ, recorded by Matthew: and therefore, from their nature and inherent qualities, we must judge of the sort and the extent of inequality put by Christ between Peter and the rest.

These are summed up in the four following: I. That Peter is the Rock, on which the Church was to be built by Christ, the Chief Architect. II. That the impregnable strength which the Church was to have against the gates of hell depended on its union with Peter, as the divinely laid foundation. III. That by Christ, the King of kings and Lord of lords, Peter is marked out as next to him, and after him, the bearer of the keys in the Church's heavenly kingdom. IV. And that, accordingly, universal power of binding and loosing is promised to him, leaving him responsible to Christ alone, the supreme Lawgiver and Judge. Therefore the nature of the prerogatives expressed in these four terms must be our standard both of the character and degree of inequality between the Apostles and Peter, and of the power of the Primacy promised to Peter.

But these terms mark authority, and plainly express jurisdiction and power; the inequality, therefore, is one relating to jurisdiction and power; and Peter's pre-eminence likewise such.

That these terms, which contain Peter's prerogatives, really do express jurisdiction and authority, may be thus very briefly shown. The first, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church," is drawn from architecture, exhibiting between Peter and the Church, which includes also the Apostles, the relation which exists between the foundation and the superstructure. This is one of dependence, by which accordingly the Apostles must maintain an indivisible union with Peter: which relation of dependence, again, cannot be understood without the notion of superior jurisdiction in Peter, for these are correlative. The second term corroborates this; for it is a plain duty, and undoubted moral obligation, to be united to him whom if severed from, the words of Christ do not entitle you to expect stability or victory over the gates of hell. Now, "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it" most plainly express that perseverance and victory are promised to no one, by Christ, who does not remain joined with Peter. So much for the duty which binds all Christians, and the Apostles among them, to avoid separation from Peter as their destruction. But such duty involves the faculty and authority on Peter's part of enjoining on all without exception the maintenance of unity, and of keeping from the whole body the sin of schism, which, again, expresses his superior jurisdiction. Yet plainer and more striking is the third; for in the words, "And I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven," it is foretold that Peter, in regard to the kingdom of heaven, and therefore to all Christians, whether teachers or taught, subjects or prelates, shall discharge the office of the bearer of the keys; with which jurisdiction and authority are indivisibly united. Now in the fourth, there is no matter relating to the heavenly kingdom, which is not subjected by this promise to Peter's authority. "Whatsoever thou shalt bind," "whatsoever thou shalt loose"; but this is in its own kind without limit, a full legislative and judicial power. Thus these four terms exactly agree with each other, and express, severally and collectively, prerogatives by which Peter is admitted to a singular and close association with Christ; and therefore is pre-eminent among the Apostles by his Primacy, and his superior authority over the whole Church.

They also show, with no less clearness, that Christ in bestowing these prerogatives and Primacy on Peter, designed to produce the visible unity of his kingdom and Church; and this in two ways, the first typically prefiguring the Church's own unity in Peter, the single Foundation, Bearer of the keys, and supreme Legislator and Judge; the second efficiently, as by a principle and cause, forming, holding together, and protecting, visible unity in that same Peter, as he discharged these functions. For just as the building is based on the foundation, and by virtue of it all the parts are held together, so a kingdom's unity and harmonious administration are first moulded out and then preserved, in the unity of its supreme authority.

And this Primacy may be regarded from three different points of view; as it is in itself, and as it regards its efficient and its final cause. As to the first, it consists in superior jurisdiction and authority; as to the second, it springs from Christ himself, who said to Peter alone, "And I too say unto thee," etc.; as to the third, it prefigures, forms, and protects the Church's visible unity.

But to prefigure, to form, and to protect the Church's unity being distinct functions, care must be taken not to confuse them, the former concerning the Primacy as a type, the two latter as the origin and efficient cause; and also not to concede the former while the latter are denied, which latter make up the Primacy as jurisdictional and the instrument effecting unity. Now, Peter is both the type of unity, its origin, and its efficient cause.

A long line¹ of Fathers, from the most ancient downwards, regards Peter as at once the type, and the origin, and efficient cause of unity; setting it forth as a prerogative of his headship that no one, whether Apostle, or Prophet, or Evangelist, or Doctor, or Teacher, might separate from him without the crime of schism. In this consists his Primacy, and in this the famous phrase of St Cyprian finds its solution, that “ the Episcopate is one, of which a part is held by each without division of the whole.”

¹ These testimonies have been set forth at length in another work, The See of St Peter, the Rock of the Church, etc., pp. 97-118.

And, what is like to the preceding, they hold that Peter is the continuous source of all power in the Church, and that while its plenitude dwells in his person, a portion of it is derived to the various prelates under him. No one has set this forth more fully than St Leo, in the middle of the fifth century, as where he says, that “ if Christ willed that other rulers should enjoy aught together with him (that is, Peter), yet never did he give, save through him, what he denied not to others.”¹

All these consequences seem to result from the words of our Lord, here solemnly addressed to Peter.

But, recurring to our general view, we find our Lord three several² times appealed to by the Apostles to declare who should be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. While on neither of these occasions does he declare to them that there should be no “ greater one ” among them, though such a declaration would have terminated their rivalry, on the last and most urgent, at the very eve of his departure from them, he sets forth in vivid words what ought to be the character and deportment of the one so to be placed over them. Then turning his conversation from them in a body to Peter in particular, he charges him, at a future time, when he shall obtain for him the gift of a faith that could not fail, to “confirm his brethren.” Having before dwelt on the full meaning of these words, we need only remark how marvellously they coincide in force with the prophecy which we have just been considering, while they differ from it in expression. They convey as absolutely a supreme authority as the former; an authority independent of others, and exclusive of participation; and one which is given for the maintenance of the faith and of visible unity in that faith. Nor can we imagine a more fitting termination to the whole of our Lord’s dealing with his disciples before his Passion, than that, when about to be taken from them, he should designate, in words so full of affection and provident care, one who was presently to take his own place among them. “Simon, Simon, I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not, and thou in thy turn one day confirm thy brethren.”

¹ Serm. 4.

² Matt. xviii 1, xx 20; Luke xxii, 24.

Now, our Lord’s preference of Peter, as to rank and dignity in the Church, was during his lifetime consistent and uniform. He made to him, twice, promises so large as to include and go far beyond all that he said to the Apostles in common. He took out, as it were, of what he had first promised to Peter a portion which he afterwards promised as their common inheritance to the rest. His dealing with Peter and the Apostles after his resurrection is the exact counterpart to this. The fulfilment is equivalent to the promise. In the fourfold prophecy to Peter, in Matt. xvi, the last member is, “And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth, it shall be bound also in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, it shall be loosed also in heaven.” That this is a grant of full legislative and judicial power, given to one, we have seen. Now on a later occasion it is repeated to the Twelve together, Matt. xviii 18. But the other three members of the prophecy made to Peter are never repeated to the Twelve. In the fulfilment the same distinction takes place. To the Twelve in common our Lord communicates the power contained in the fourth member of his original promise, saying, John xx 21, "As the Father hath sent me, I also send you. Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whose sins ye shall forgive, they are forgiven them: and whose sins ye shall retain, they are retained:" to which the other forms contained in Matt. xxviii 18, Mark xvi 15, Luke xxiv 49, Acts i 4, 8, of preaching the Gospel to every creature, of waiting for the power of the Holy Ghost wherewith they should be endued, of teaching men to observe all things which he had commanded, are equivalent, though less definite. But nowhere are the powers contained in the first three members of the prophecy to Peter communicated to the Twelve. As the promises were made to Peter alone originally, so to Peter alone are they, as we shall see, fulfilled. Indeed, it could not be otherwise, for the promises to be the rock of the Church, by coherence with which the Church should be impregnable, and the bearer of the keys, are in their own nature confined to one, and exclusive of participants; and once made by the very truth himself to one man, they ranged under his power all his brethren: "For the promises of Jesus Christ, as well as his gifts, are without repentance; and what is once given indefinitely and universally is irrevocable."¹ Besides that, another indisputable principle must be taken into account—viz., “ that power given to several carries its restriction in its division ”: just as if a king before his death bequeaths the whole administration of his sovereignty to a board of twelve councillors, though the sum of authority so conveyed be sovereign, yet the share of each individual in the college will be restricted by the equal right of his colleagues. Whereas “ power given to one alone, and over all, and without exception, carries with it plenitude, and, not having to be divided with any other, it has no bounds save those which its terms convey.” Such was the power originally promised to Peter; and such, no less, that which was ultimately conveyed. He stands apart and alone no less in the fulfilment than in the promise. And under another image, but one equally expressive with the first, the Lord conveys an authority as absolute and as exclusive. The “ bounds which its terms convey ” are the whole fold of Christ: “ the sheep ” no less than “ the lambs ”: to “ govern ” no less than “ to feed.”¹ The great Architect of the heavenly city said to Peter, “ Thou art the Rock ”; and “ the King of kings,” who “ hath the key of David,” and “ on whose shoulder is the government,” “ To thee will I give the keys of the kingdom of heaven.” He “who upholdeth all things by the word of his power,” and “in whom all things consist,” said to Peter, “Confirm thy brethren.” To the same Peter, the same “Great Shepherd of the sheep” said, “Feed my lambs, be shepherd over my sheep,” thus committing to him the chief Apostles themselves who heard this charge, and causing there to be for ever “one fold and one shepherd,” on earth as in heaven.

¹ Bossuet, Sermon sur l'Unité.

¹ Ποιμαίνει, gubernare, to govern, the particular word which our Lord employs to convey his powers to Peter, is also the particular word which gives such offence to temporal governments, when acted on by Peter: βόσκειν, pascere, to feed, they find more endurable, and probably they would all be content, from the heathen Roman emperors to the present day, to allow the Church to feed, so long as they are allowed to govern the faithful. The objection on the part of the Church is, that our Lord gave both to Peter.

It remains briefly to consider these three palmary texts in their reciprocal relations to each other, by which the fullest light is thrown upon the Scriptural prerogatives of St Peter.

1. First, then, all these texts are in the most marked manner circumscribed to Peter alone. In all he is addressed by name; in all he is distinguished by other circumstances from his brethren at the time present with him; in all a special condition is attached belonging to him. In the first, it is superior faith—in the second, faith, which, by a particular gift, the fruit of Christ’s own prayer, should never fail—in the third, superior love. So that, without an utter disregard of the meaning of words, and the force of the context, and every law of grammar and philology, no one of these texts can be extended from its application to Peter alone, and made common to the other Apostles.

2. Secondly, the note of priority in time is secured to Peter by the first text, to which the other two correspond. Even if the promise in Matt. xviii 18, made to all the Apostles, were of equal latitude with that previously made to Peter, which it is so very far from being that it contains one point only out of four, yet, the fact that they had been already ranged by the former under him, and that he had been promised singly what they afterwards were promised in common, would make a vast difference between them; indeed, the difference of the Primacy. But, as it is, the very first mention of the Church is connected with a promise made to Peter of the highest authority in that Church, and a perpetual relationship, entering into its inmost constitutions between it and his person. Before the Church is formed, it is foretold that Peter shall rule her; before she is set up against the gates of hell, that, by virtue of her coherence with him, she should prevail over them. And the germ of her Episcopate, on which she is to grow, is sown in his person, just as, in the last act of our Lord, that Episcopate is delivered over to him, universal and complete.

3. Thirdly, these three texts are exactly equivalent to each other; they each involve and express the other. They could not have been said of different persons without contradiction and confusion. He who has one of them must have the rest. There is variation of image, but identity of meaning. Thus, the relation between Peter and the Church is in the first, that of Foundation and Superstructure; of the heaven-built city, and of him who holds its keys: in the second, it is that of the Architect, who, by skill and authority won for him, and given to him, by the Supreme Builder, the Word and Wisdom of God, maintains every living stone of the structure in its due place; in the third, it is that of the supreme and universal pastor and his whole flock. In all of these there is the habit of dependence between the superior and that over which he is set: in all the need of close coherence with him. Observe in particular the identity of the second and third. The special office of the Shepherd of souls¹ is to lead his flock into suitable pastures—that is, duly to instruct them in the Divine Word and Will. The pastoral office is identical with that of teaching: “He gave some Apostles, some Prophets, some Evangelists, some Pastors and Teachers”; the former are distinguished, the last united together. Here the Apostle observes, that the whole ministry, from the highest to the lowest, is organized “to edify the body of Christ into the unity of faith,” and to preserve men from being “carried about by every wind of doctrine.” But if this was the design of Christ as to the whole ministry, and as to each individual teacher, most of all was it in instituting one supreme and universal Pastor. In him most of all would be seen the perfect *fitting in together*² of each individual member; he was set up especially for the compacting of each spiritual joint, the harmony and cohesion of the whole. Here, then, the office of the universal Pastor or Teacher is precisely equivalent to him who, by another image, confirms, strengthens, consolidates his brethren. Thus, in the second text, Christ foretold the third. But the more we contemplate all the three in their mutual relations, the more a certain thought suggests itself to the mind. There is a special doctrine concerning the most Holy Trinity, the most distinctive of that great mystery, which expresses the reciprocal indwelling of the Three Persons. Now, something analogous may be said of the way in which these three texts impermeate and include each other, of their exact equivalence, and distinct, but inseparable force: of whom one is said, of the same must all.

¹ Passaglia, p. 591.

² Ὁ καταρτισμὸς τῶν ἁγίων, Eph. iv 12.

4. Fourthly, they all indicate a sovereign authority, independent itself, on which all others depend; symbolizing power from above, whilst claiming obedience from below; immutable in itself, by which all the rest are made proof against change. It is not, indeed, to the sheep that the shepherd is responsible, but to their owner. It has been said throughout that the one special mark of Peter's distinction was a peculiar association with Christ. It is not therefore by any infringement of equal rights that this authority is set up, but as the representative, the vicegerent, of him in whom all power dwells. He bore this authority in his own body, and committed to another what was first his own, both by creation and by purchase—"Feed my sheep." In all these texts the immediate transference of authority from the person of the God-man is most striking; in Peter he inaugurates his great theandric dispensation, and forms the body which he was to leave on earth. Thus these texts most clearly express that important doctrine of antiquity, the keystone of the Church's liberty from the world, which is the reason why the world so hates it: "The first see is judged by no man." So entirely have political ideas and jealousies infected our mode of judging of spiritual things—to such a degree is our peculiar civil liberty made the standard of Church government—that it is necessary to insist again and again on what to Christians ought to be a first principle—viz., that "all power and jurisdiction in the Church ought to rest not upon natural and human authority, but on the divine authority of Christ. This is the reason why we may pronounce no otherwise concerning such jurisdiction, than we know has been handed down from Christ, its proper Author and Founder. Now, it is certain that at the same moment at which Christ instituted the community called the Church, such a power was introduced, and entrusted as well to Peter singly as the head, as to the Apostles under him. Nay, that power was fixed and constituted, and its Ministers and Bishops marked out, before the Church—that is, the whole body and commonwealth, had grown into coherence. And so ecclesiastical jurisdiction did not first dwell in the community itself, and was then translated by a sort of popular suffrage and consent to its magistrates; but from the very first origin Peter was destined to be single chief of the future body, and next to him the other Apostles.”¹

5. Fifthly, it must be observed that there is a definiteness about these texts which belongs in a far less degree to those forms in which the co-ordinate and co-equal authority of the Apostles, as such, is expressed. This last is left to be harmonized and brought into operation by the superior power of the chief. They are indeed sent into all the world, they are immediately instituted by our Lord, they have the promise that his power shall be with them, and that their sentence shall stand good in heaven and on earth. This promise, which is the most distinct made to them, has been already gathered up into the hands of one, and in its practical issue is limited by the necessity of co-operating with that one; that is, the authority of Peter includes and embraces theirs, but theirs is ranged under his. Theirs is modified not only by being shared, but by having his set over them. Now observe how distinct and clear, how definite in their meaning, while universal in their range, are the things said of him alone: (1) That he should be the rock on which Christ would build his Church; (2) that permanence and victory should belong to that Church for ever through him; (3) that he should bear the keys in the kingdom of heaven; (4) that whatever singly he should bind and loose, should be bound and loosed in heaven as well as on earth; (5) that he should confirm his brethren, the Apostles themselves being the very first so called; (6) that he should be the shepherd of the fold. What can constitute inequality between two parties, if such a series of promises given to one, and not to the other, does not?

¹ Petavius, de Ecc. Hier., lib. iii, c. 14.

6. Sixthly, these promises cannot be contemplated without seeing that the ordinary and regular government of the Church springs from the person whom they designate, and in whom they are concentrated. To take the last, all spiritual care is summed up in the word Pastorship, the office of Priest, Bishop, Metropolitan, Patriarch, and Pope, rising in degree, and extending in range, but in its nature the same. On the contrary, Apostles (with this one exception, in virtue of the Primacy), Prophets, and Evangelists, are extraordinary officers, attending the opening of the dispensation, but afterwards dropping off. But the Church, as it was to endure for ever, and the orderly arrangement of the divine ministry, were summed up in the Primacy, and flowed forth from it as the full receptacle of the virtue of God the Word Incarnate. And so it is the head of the ministerial body. All which is set forth as in a picture to the mind, in that scene upon the shore of the lake of Galilee, when the Lord said to Peter, "Feed my sheep."

7. And, again, Peter was thus made the beginning and principle of spiritual power, as it left the person of God the Word, not for once, but for ever. Long as the structure should endure, its principle of cohesion must bind it. As the law of gravitation binds all worlds together in the natural kingdom, and is a continuous source of strength and harmony, so should be in the spiritual kingdom that force which the same wisdom of God established. It goes on with power undiminished; it is the full fountain-head from which all streams emanate; it is the highest image of God's power as the centre and source of all things. This idea is dwelt upon by St Cyprian and St Augustine, as well as by Pope St Innocent,¹ the contemporary of the latter, and was afresh expressed in a synodical letter of the three provinces of Africa to Pope Theodore, in A.D. 646, "No one can doubt there is in the Apostolic see a great unfailing fountain, pouring forth waters for all Christians, whence rich streams proceed, bountifully irrigating the whole Christian world."²

8. And, lastly, in these great promises Peter is specially set forth as the type and the efficient cause of visible unity in the Church. Such was the very purpose of Christ, that his disciples might be one, as he and the Father are one. For this end, in the words of St Augustine, "He entrusted his sheep to Peter, as to another self, he willed to make him one with himself"; and in the words of St Leo, "He assumed him into the participation of his indivisible unity."¹ But this is seen no less plainly in the words of Christ than in the Fathers; for he made one Rock, one Bearer of the keys, one Confirmer of the brethren, and one Shepherd. The union of millions of naturally conflicting wills in the profession and belief of one doctrine is almost the very highest work of divine power; and as grace—that is, the Holy Spirit diffused in the heart—is the inward efficient of this, so the outward, both symbol and instrument, is the Primacy, that "other self" which the Lord left in the world. And as the Church of God through every succeeding age grows and expands, the need of this power becomes greater and not less, and reverence to that "single chair in which unity was to be observed by all,"² a more imperative virtue, or rather an ever-deepening instinct, of the Christian mind.

¹ St Cyprian, de Unitate, c. 3. St Aug. to Pope Innocent, Ep. 177, n. 19. Pope Innocent to the Councils of Carthage and Numidia.

² Mansi, x 919.

But antiquity itself drew no other conclusions from the concentration of these great privileges in the person of Peter. We have but to go back to a time before the present nationalities of Europe, those jealous foes of Peter's authority, had come into existence, and we find the chief men of France, and Spain, and Italy, interpreting the above texts as we have done. Take one whose testimony from the circumstances of his life ought to be above suspicion. John Cassian was by birth a Scythian, was educated in a monastery at Bethlehem, travelled through Egypt, and made himself acquainted with its most distinguished religious men, went to Constantinople, and was ordained deacon by St Chrysostom, and afterwards at Rome priest by Pope Innocent I. On the capture of Rome by Alaric, he settled at Marseilles, about the year 410, and there founded two monasteries. In his work on the Incarnation he says,¹ “ Let us ask him who is supreme, both as disciple among disciples and as a teacher among teachers, who, steering the course of the Roman Church, held the supremacy as well of the faith as of the priesthood. Tell us, therefore, tell us, we pray, O Peter, prince of the Apostles, tell us how the churches ought to believe. For just it is that thou who wast taught of the Lord, shouldst teach us, and open to us the door whose key thou hast received. Shut out all who undermine the heavenly house, and turn away those who attempt to make an entry through treacherous caverns and illicit approaches; because it is certain that no one shall be able to enter the door of the kingdom save he to whom the key placed by thee in the Church shall open it. Tell us, therefore, how we ought to believe that Jesus is the Christ, and to confess our common Lord.” Again, fourteen hundred years ago, Maximus, Bishop of Turin in that day, confessed by his words, what his successor of the present day bears witness to by his sufferings; for he writes of Peter, “ As² the Good Shepherd he received the defence of the flock, so that he, who before had been weak in his own case, might become the confirmation to all: and he who had been shaken by the temptation of the question asked him, might be a foundation to the rest by the stability of his faith. In short, for the firmness of his devotion he is called the Rock of the Churches, as the Lord says, 'Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church.' For he is called the Rock, because he was the first to lay the foundations of the faith among the nations, and because, as an immovable stone, he holds together the framework and the mass of the whole Christian structure. Peter, therefore, for his devotion is called the Rock, and the Lord is named the Rock by his inherent power, as the Apostle says, 'And they drank of the spiritual rock that followed them, and the rock was Christ.' Rightly does he merit to share the name, who, likewise, merits to share the work." Again, far and wide has the lying story been spread by false-hearted men who above all things hate the spiritual kingdom which God has set up in the world, that Peter's power has been the growth of gradual encroachment on the secular authority. Now, long before Pelayo renewed the Spanish monarchy in the mountains of the Asturias, and while Augustine, sent by Pope Gregory, was laying the foundation of the English Church, St Isidore, Bishop of Seville, from 598 to 636, the very highest of the ancient Spanish doctors, wrote thus explicitly to his colleague at Toledo:¹ "As to the question of the equality of the Apostles, Peter is pre-eminent over the rest, who merited to hear from the Lord, 'Thou shalt be called Cephas. . . . Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church.' And not from any one else, but from the very Son of God and the Virgin, he was the first to receive the honour of the pontificate in the Church of Christ, to whom also, after the resurrection of the Son of God, was said by the same, 'Feed my lambs,' noting by the name of lambs the prelates of the Churches. And although the dignity of this power is derived to all Catholic Bishops, yet in a more special manner it remains for ever in the Roman Bishop, who is by a certain singular privilege set as the head over the other limbs. Whoso, therefore, renders not reverently to him due obedience, involves himself, as being severed from the head, in the schism of the Acephali."

¹ St Aug., Serm. 46. St Leo, Epistle 10.

² St Optatus, cont. Parm., lib. ii, c. 6.

¹ Lib. iii, c. 12.

² De Petro Apostolo, Hom. 4.

¹ Ad Eugenium Toletanum.

It would be easy to multiply such authorities of a period prior to the formation of all the existing European states. It was the will of God, providing for his Church, that before the old Roman society was utterly upheaved from its foundations by the deluge of the Northern tribes, reverence for St Peter's throne should be fixed as an immovable rock, on which a new Christian civilization might be founded. Thus Pope Gregory II, writing to the Emperor Leo the Isaurian, about the year 717, only sums up the force and effect of all preceding tradition, when he says, "The whole West turns its eyes upon us, and, unworthy though we be, puts complete trust in us, and in that blessed Peter, whose image you threaten to overturn, but whom all the kingdoms of the West count for a God upon earth."¹

¹ Mansi, Concil., tom. xii 972.

CHAPTER V

ST PETER'S PRIMACY AS EXHIBITED IN THE ACTS

THE purpose¹ of St Luke in writing the Acts seems to have been to set before us the labours and sufferings of the Apostles in planting and propagating the Church. But he has divided the book very distinctly into two portions; the latter, from the thirteenth chapter to the end, with one short exception, is wholly occupied with the labours of St Paul, "the vessel of election," in spreading the faith among the Gentiles, and so contains the particular history of that Apostle, and the Churches founded by him. The former, from the beginning to the end of the twelfth chapter, embraces the history of the Apostles in common, and of the whole Church, as it rose at Jerusalem, and was spread first in Judea, then in Samaria, and finally extended to the Gentiles. The former history, then, is universal; the latter, particular.

Moreover, to use the words of St Chrysostom,² "We may here see the promises which Christ made in the Gospels carried into execution, and the bright light of truth shining in the very actions, and a great change in the disciples, arising from the Spirit that had entered into them. . . . You will see here

¹ Passaglia, p. 138.

² Ibid., p. 140. St Chrys. in Acta, Hom. 1.

Apostles speeding on the wing over land and sea, and men once timid and unskilled, suddenly changed into despisers of wealth, and conquerors of glory and all other passions; you will see them united in the utmost harmony, without jealousy, which once they had, without contention for the higher place.”

We may say, then, in a word, that the Gospels are a history of the Head, and the Acts of the mystical Body. Hence both issue forth from one and the same fountain and source. The history of the Head begins with that descent of the Holy Ghost, whereby Christ was conceived, and “the race¹ of God and of man became one. For just as the union of man with woman joins two families, so, upon Christ assuming flesh, by that flesh the whole Church became of kin with Christ, Paul became Christ’s kinsman, and Peter, each one of the faithful, and every holy person. Therefore, says Paul,² ‘being the offspring of God,’ and again ‘we are the body of Christ and members in particular’—that is, through the flesh, which he has assumed—we are his kinsmen.” Now, the history of the Body, proceeding from the same fountain-head, sets before us the Holy Spirit, who, by descending first on the teachers, and afterwards on the disciples, exalts and advances all, and by imparting himself, imparts “the proportional deification of man”—that is, “the utmost possible assimilation and union with God.”³ For “the Spirit works in us by his proper power, truly sanctifying and uniting us to himself into one frame, and making us partakers of the divine nature":¹ "becoming, as it were, a quality of the Godhead in us, and dwelling in the saints, and abiding for ever."

¹ St Chrys. Hom. in Ascens., and in Acta, tom. iii, p. 773.

² Acts xvii 28, 29, and compare 1 Cor. xii 12-17 with Eph. iv 16.

³ Dionys. de Cœl. Hier., cap. 1, § 3.

Now it is² manifest that if the first twelve chapters of the Acts contain the history of the Church from its beginning, and what the Apostles did for its first formation, its growth, and its form of government, all this has the closest connection with the question as to Peter's prerogatives. For the historical accounts in the Acts, which exhibit the execution of Christ's promises and intentions, naturally tend to set in the fullest light, and to reveal distinctly, whatever as to the administration of the Church may be less clearly foretold in the Gospels. For in itself the execution is declaratory of the enactment, and supplies a safe rule for understanding and determining the words of institution. Now, if we apply this rule to the present question, it will be apparent that those expressions of the Gospel, which we assigned to the divine institution of the Primacy, cannot be otherwise received without making the execution in the Acts at variance with what the Gospels record.

For, take it as a still doubtful hypothesis whether there exist evangelical testimonies of Peter's institution to be head and chief of the Apostles. What needs it to turn this hypothesis into certainty? What should we expect of Peter, if he really had received from Christ the charge of leading the other Apostles? That he should never follow, but always be at the head; should close dissensions, weigh and terminate controversies, punish emergent offences, maintain the general discipline, give the support of his counsel and authority in need, and leave undone none of those functions which accompany the office of head and supreme ruler? Hence it is plain that there are two ways, the one absolute, the other hypothetical, by which a decisive judgement may be drawn from the history of the Acts, as to whether Peter's Primacy was instituted in the Gospels. Critics and philosophers are perpetually using both these tests. Thus, the former, "if a certain work—say the epistles of the martyr Ignatius—be genuine, it ought to contain certain characteristics. But it does contain these and so is genuine." Or absolutely, "a certain work, the epistles of Ignatius, contains all which we should expect in a genuine work, therefore it is genuine." The latter infer, "If bodies be moved by the law of gravitation, they would pass through a certain space under such and such a condition. But this they do, and accordingly are moved by gravitation." Or absolutely, "Bodies left to themselves pass through space under such conditions as they would follow, if impelled by gravitation. Accordingly, they are so impelled." Now, in the parallel case, "If Christ in the Gospels preordained a form of Church government, which gathered up the supreme power and visible headship into Peter's hands, the exercise of such institution ought to be found in the Acts. But it is so found. Therefore," etc. Or again, "No one would expect certain acts from Peter, unless he were the head of all the Apostles; and all would fairly expect those acts of Peter, if they recognized him as so set over all by Christ. Now, in the general history of the Apostles we find such acts recorded of Peter, and that not partially, here and there, but in a complete series. Accordingly the history of the rising Church, exhibited in the first part of the Acts, demands Peter's Primacy for its explanation; and if we deny that Primacy, and take in another sense the words recording its institution in the Gospel, the history becomes unintelligible."

¹ St Cyril. Thes., lib. xxxiv, p. 352, and lib. ix, on John, p. 810.

² Passaglia, p. 143.

Now, this reasoning is conclusive in either way, provided only that what we have asserted be really found in the Acts. The proof of this may be either general, or piecemeal and particular. We will take both in order, beginning with the former.

1. First,¹ then, we must repeat, as concerns that whole portion of the Acts containing the history of the universal Church, and all the Apostles—viz., the first twelve chapters—a remark before made as to the Gospels, which is, that Peter singly is more often mentioned than all the rest put together. For Peter's name occurs more than fifty times, the others very seldom, and those who are found the oftenest, John and James, are recorded, the former seven or eight, the latter three or four times. Yet this is a history of them all: Luke is recording the common exertions of all the Apostles in building up the Church. This is the very distinction between the former and the latter portion of his book, which is confined to the labours of St Paul, leaving aside the rest of the Church. What then is the reason that Peter, in a general history, is so often brought forward, and the rest, either singly or in conjunction, so seldom? Because after our Lord's glorious ascension Peter stood to the eleven in an analogous position to that held by our Lord, so long as he was visible, towards the whole College; because Peter was become the head, and the rest, as members, were ranged under him.

¹ Passaglia, p. 144.

2. Such subordination on their part, such pre-eminence on his, Luke¹ shows yet more clearly, whenever he groups Peter with the rest, by assigning to him the leading place. It frequently happens to him to speak of Peter and the rest together, but on no one occasion does he give Peter any but the first place and the leading part. Just as the evangelists do with regard to Christ, and the Apostles and disciples, so Luke prefers Peter to the rest, to mark a difference between the rank and office of Peter and that of the others.

3. Luke seems to confirm his readers in such a conclusion by the form which he follows of mentioning Peter directly, and the rest obliquely or in a mass. These are instances: "In those days Peter, rising up in the midst of the brethren, said"—"Peter, standing up with the Eleven, lifted up his voice"—"They said to Peter and to the rest of the Apostles"—"Peter, with John, fastening his eyes upon him, said, Look upon us"—"Peter and the Apostles answering, said."² Now, what form of writing could Luke choose, to refute an opinion about the universal equality of the Apostles? Or to show Peter as set over the rest, and to satisfy in this even the most unreasonable? Either the form which he did choose is calculated to do this, or none such can be found.

¹ Acts i 13; ii 14; iii 1-3; iv 19; viii 14.

² Acts i 15; ii 14, 37; iii 4; v 29.

4. Add to this that Peter is represented as speaking and answering, when the occasion would suggest that all the Apostles, equally, should disclose their mind. The reproaches of the unbelieving Jews affected not Peter singly, but all alike; yet he alone stands forth, he alone lifts up his voice and in a long speech brings them to sound reflection. The multitude, struck with compunction, asked not Peter only, but the rest likewise, "What shall we do, men and brethren?" Yet it is forthwith added, "But Peter said to them." Upon the miracle by which one who had been lame from his mother's womb was healed, "all the people ran together to them," both Peter and John, but Peter alone speaks, and takes on himself the defence of the common cause: "Peter seeing, made answer to the people."¹ Fresh instances may be found in chaps. iv 6, 7, and v 2, 3. The result of the whole is that Peter is continually "the mouthpiece of the Apostles,"² always takes the lead, and gives his own mind, as conveying that of the rest.

On what ground does he do this? Was it from natural fervour of disposition? But it was the same after he was filled with the Holy Spirit as before. Was it the result of superior age, or first calling? No! facts refute this. What other cause can be suggested save that Primacy which the Gospels record and the Acts confirm?

5. To this we must likewise refer it that Luke, while he amply describes actions which belong to Peter, rather hints at than narrates what concerns the other Apostles. Thus he leaves it to be understood that the others spoke, while he gives Peter's discourses entire, and seems to have chosen them as the principal material of his history. He simply suggests that miracles were wrought by the rest, but records particularly what Peter did for the establishment of the faith. He relates very little of those who became Christians by the exertion of others, but notes at large the abundant fruit of Peter's teaching. Take an ancient author's summary of the Acts, "this whole volume is about the ascension of Christ after the resurrection, and about the descent of the Holy Spirit on the holy Apostles, and how and where the disciples announced Christ's religion, and all the wondrous deeds which they did by prayer and faith in Him, and about Paul's divine calling from heaven, his apostleship, and fruitful preaching, and in a word about those many great dangers which the Apostles underwent for Christ."¹ Follow, out of this, all which concerns the universal Church in the first twelve chapters, and Peter will be found not only the principal, but wellnigh the only, figure in the foreground.

¹ Acts ii 13, 37, 38; iii 11, 12.

² St Chrysostom.

6. Hence, as the Gospels may be called the history of Christ, so this first part of the Acts may be called the history of Peter; for as Christ occupies each page of the Gospels, so Peter here. Nothing can be more emphatic or more just than St Chrysostom's words: "Behold him making his rounds on every side, and the first to be found; when an Apostle was to be chosen, he was the first; when the Jews were to be told that they were not drunken; when the lame man was to be healed; when the multitude was to be addressed, he is before the rest; when they had to do with the rulers, it is he; when with Ananias, when healings took place from the shadow, still it is he. Where there was danger, it is he, and where there was dispensation; but when all is tranquil, they act in common. He sought not the greater honour. But again, when miracles are to be worked, he comes forth before the rest.”¹ What can prove Peter’s pre-eminence if this does not? His words on another occasion deserve mention. Alluding to the title “Acts of the Apostles,” which seems to promise their common history, he observes, “Yet if you search accurately, the first part of the book exhibits Peter’s miracles and teaching, but little on the part of the other Apostles; and after this the whole account is spent on Paul.” But he adds, “How are they the Acts of all the Apostles? Because, according to Paul, when one member is glorified, all the members are glorified with it; the historian did not entitle them the Acts of Peter and of Paul, but the Acts of the Apostles; the promise of the writer includes them all.”² Now, every one must feel the very high distinction given to Paul in the latter part of the book, when the historian turns away from the general history of the Church to record his particular labours, in which, no doubt, the object was to show the progress of the Church among the Gentiles; but with regard to the part which is common to the whole Church, another thought is suggested. The history of what Peter taught and did, to build up and extend the Church, is considered the common history of the Apostles, and so inscribed as their Acts. But can this be called an accurate expression, unless Peter had been the head of the Apostles? It is very plain that the acts of a head are imputed to the whole body; to a college of brethren, what its chief executes; to a city or kingdom, the deeds of its prince. But it is not plain how this can be, if the actor be one of a number, and do not exceed his brethren in honour or dignity. Therefore the Acts of Peter could be called, generally, the Acts of the Apostles, only because they were considered the Acts of their head.

¹ Euthalius, apud Zaccagnium, p. 410.

¹ In Acta, Hom. 21, n. 2.

² Hom. in Acta, n. 8, tom. iii 764.

Now let us pass from the general view to that in detail.

I. After¹ the Lord's ascension a most important point immediately arose, whether, that is, the number of the Twelve was to be filled up by the election of a new Apostle to take the place of Judas. The will of Christ on this matter was to be learnt; a witness was to be chosen who should participate in the mission of Christ Himself, according to the words, "As the Father hath sent me, I also send you," and carry the light of the Gospel to the ends of the world; and one was to be elected to the dignity of the Apostolate, the highest rank in the Church. It was, therefore, so important a matter, that no one could undertake it save he who had received the vicarious headship of our Lord himself. Now, the history in the Acts tells us that Peter alone spoke on the subject of substituting a fresh

¹ Passaglia, p. 148.

Apostle for Judas; Peter alone proved from Scripture the necessity of the election, defined the conditions of eligibility, and appointed the mode of election, and presided over and directed the whole transaction.

For Luke begins thus; “ In those days,” the interval between the Ascension and Pentecost, “ Peter rising up in the midst of the brethren, said.” Here the important prerogative of initiation is shown to belong to Peter, and by the phrase, “ in the midst of the brethren,” or “ disciples,”—which is often used of Christ in respect of the Apostles—his pre-eminence over the disciples is shown. “ Brethren, it behoved that the Scripture should be fulfilled which the Holy Ghost spoke before by the mouth of David, concerning Judas, who was the leader of them that apprehended Jesus, who was numbered with us, and had obtained part of this ministry ”—that is, of the Apostolate. Then having mentioned the miserable end of the traitor, he applies to him the prophecy: “ For it is written in the Book of Psalms, ‘ Let his habitation become desolate, and let there be none to dwell therein ’: and,” adding another prophecy from another Psalm, “ ‘ his bishopric let another take.’ ”¹ Whence he concludes, “ Wherefore of these men who have companied with us all the time that the Lord Jesus came in and went out among us, beginning from the baptism of John, until the day wherein he was taken up from us, one of these must be made a witness with us of his resurrection.” In these words Peter plainly points out the necessity of the matter in question, confirms it by the Holy Scriptures, speaking in the character of their highest interpreter, and as the appointed teacher of all; and, while proposing it to their deliberation, yet requires their consent; for the phrase, “wherefore, one must,” means, “I am not proposing what may be done or left undone, but declaring and prescribing what is to be done.” So he determines the conditions of eligibility and the form of election. Whereupon his hearers—“the number of persons together about an hundred and twenty”—instantly agree unanimously to Peter’s proposition, follow its conditions, and complete the election.

¹ Ps. lxix 26; cviii 8.

No one can reflect on the above without concluding that if Peter presided over the rest by the authority of a divinely chosen headship, no course could be more becoming, both for Peter and for the disciples, than this; and if, on the contrary, Peter was only one out of many, not having yet even received the Pentecostal gifts of the Holy Spirit, and had been entrusted by Christ with no pre-eminent office in the ministry, nothing could be more unfitting for both. We have therefore to infer that Peter “stood in the midst of his disciples,” as a superior among inferiors, not as an equal among equals, and conceived that the charge of supplying an Apostle, and filling up the Apostolic college, belonged in chief to himself, because he and they alike were conscious that he was the steward set in chief over the Lord’s family.

But, clear as this is on the face of the narration itself, fresh light is shed on it by the fact that St Chrysostom observed and recorded this very conclusion. For why did Peter alone arise? Why was he the first and the only one to speak? “Both¹ as fervent, and as one entrusted by Christ with the flock, and as the first of the choir, he ever first begins to speak.” Why does he allege prophecy? First, that he might not seem with human counsel “to attempt a great matter, and one fitted for Christ”: next to imitate his Master, “he always reasons from the Scriptures.” “Why did he not singly ask of Christ to give him some one in the place of Judas?” Because “Peter had now improved,” and overcome his natural disposition. But “might not Peter by himself have elected? Certainly: but he does not so, that he may not seem partial.” “Why does he communicate this to them,” the whole number of the names? That the matter may not be contested, nor they fall into strife: “for” (he alludes to the contention of the Apostles for the primacy), “if this had happened to themselves, much more would it to the others”—that is, the candidates to succeed Judas. Then he points out to our admiration “Peter doing this with common consent, nothing with authority,² nothing with lordship,” where we must note that the abuse of a power is only to be feared from one who really has that power. For again he says, “he first acts on authority³ in the matter, as having himself all put into his hands, for to him Christ said, ‘And thou, in thy turn, one day confirm thy brethren.’”

The college of the Apostles completed, it followed that the head, if such there were, would, on every occasion of danger, be the first to protect it and to defend its reputation. Now there ensues the miracle of the Holy Spirit's descent, and the gift of tongues, whereupon Luke describes the various opinions of the astonished multitude, some of whom "mocking,¹ said, These men are full of new wine." That is, they blasphemed the working of the Spirit, and by the most monstrous calumny were destroying the good name of the Apostles. Whereupon, "Peter, standing up with the Eleven, lifted up his voice and spoke to them: Ye men of Judea, and all you that dwell in Jerusalem, be this known to you, and with your ears receive my words. For these are nor drunk as you suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day: but this is that which was spoken of by the prophet Joel." Now here, both the form of the words, and the matter, establish Peter's Primacy. For the phrase, "Peter standing up with the Eleven, lifted up his voice and spoke to them," portrays Peter as the leader of the band, the master of the family. So St Chrysostom,² "What means with the Eleven? They uttered a common voice, and he was the mouthpiece of all. And the Eleven stand beside him, bearing witness to his words." And as to the matter, Peter alone fulfils the part of teacher, by interpreting Scripture, and declaring the agreement of both covenants: Peter alone maintains the common cause; Peter alone, representing all, addresses the multitude in the name of all. "Observe, too, the harmony of the Apostles: they gave up to him the office of speaking:"³ that is, they yielded to him who was the head, and who, as he says, showed here "the courage," as before "the providential care" of the head.

¹ Hom. 3, in Act., n. 1-2.

² Ἀύθεντικῶς.

³ Ἀύθεντει.

¹ Acts ii.

² In Acta, Hom. 4, n. 3.

³ St Chrysostom, as before.

After refuting the calumny, Peter goes on in a noble discourse to explain prophecies, and then coming to the dispensation of Jesus, gives the strongest proofs of his resurrection and exaltation to the right hand of the Father, and finally sums up with great force and authority. "Therefore, let all the house of Israel know most certainly, that God hath made both Lord and Christ this same Jesus whom you have crucified."

Now, what¹ is here to our purpose? It is this, that Luke seems only to dwell on what concerns Peter: that Peter, first of all, and in the name of all, performs the office of a witness, laid both on himself and the rest ("ye shall be witnesses to me"; "and you shall give witness"²), saying, "This Jesus hath God raised up, of which we all are witnesses." Peter first of all publicly and solemnly discharges the duty of instruction with authority: first of all, he fulfils the charge set by Christ on all the Apostles, "make disciples—teach": and, first of all, he promulgates the necessity of believing in Jesus as the divinely appointed Lord and Christ. Now these are things which, so far from allowing an equality between Peter and the rest of the Apostles, point out in him a headship over them.

Thereupon, the hearers, struck with compunction for having crucified, not merely a just man, but the Anointed of the Lord, "said to Peter and the rest of the Apostles"—here again he alone is singly named—whilst of all alike they asked, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Whereupon, St Chrysostom notes,³ "Here again, where all are asked, he alone replies.” For, as Luke goes on, “Peter said to them”: as the leader, he performs what belongs to all: he alone sets forth the law of Christ. “Do penance, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins.” He alone encourages them with the promised gifts of the Holy Spirit, “and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.” He alone continues at length the instruction of the hearers, “and with very many other words did he testify and exhort them.” He alone declares the fruit of Christian profession, “save yourselves from this perverse generation,” and he alone it is, of whose ministry Luke adds, “They, therefore, that gladly received his word were baptized, and there were added, in that day, about three thousand souls.”

¹ Passaglia, p. 153.

² Acts i 8; John xv 27.

³ In Acta, Hom. 7, n. 1.

And here we see how fitting it was that Peter, whom Christ had set as the foundation and rock of the Church, should labour with all his might, as the chief architect after him, to build up the structure. But what, in the meantime, of the other Apostles? Were not they also architects? Yes, but with and under Peter, whom accordingly they attend and support. The subsequent additions to the Church’s structure and the course consistently pursued by Peter will bring this out yet more clearly. For of fresh accretions, Luke writes, “Many of them who had heard the word, believed, and the number of the men was made five thousand.”¹ Now, whose word was this? Still the word of Peter, who speaks for the third² and fourth time, as he had for the first and second.

For, as to the third³ occasion, Luke, after mentioning

¹ Acts iv 4. ² Acts iii 12-26; iv 8-19. ³ Acts iii 11, 12-26.

Peter and John together, introduces Peter alone as urging the children of Abraham to embrace the faith of Christ, and persuading them that Jesus is the Prophet promised by God through Moses in Deuteronomy. And as to the fourth,¹ he writes, "Then Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, said to them——" But was he alone present? Not so, for the council "setting them," John as well as Peter, "in the midst, they asked," on which Chrysostom² observes, "See how John is on every occasion silent, while Peter defends him likewise." That is, John was silent, as knowing that the lead belonged to Peter, and Peter spoke, because the head defends not himself only, but the members committed to him.

Now, reviewing these first four chapters of the Acts, let us ask these questions. Had Peter held the authority of head among the Apostles, what would he have done? He would have filled up the Apostolic college, carefully watched over it, protected its several members. But this is just what he did. Again, had Christ made him the supreme teacher and doctor, what would he have done? He would have disclosed, first to the Apostles themselves, and to the disciples, and then to the multitude, who were to be converted, the secrets of the divine will laid up in the Scriptures; he would have shown the agreement between the dispensation of Christ and the oracles of the Old Testament, and so have proved that Jesus was the Messias. But this he repeatedly did. Once more, had Christ made him the chief among the builders of the Church, what would have been his office? He would have been the very first to set his hand to the work, and to construct the building with living stones; he would have held the other workmen under his control, so that the edifice might rise worthy of Christ, and exactly answering to his promises. But does not the history give precisely this picture of him, and does not the Church which Peter raised answer exactly to the archetype prescribed by the Lord? "All they that believed were together, and had all things common:" "the multitude of believers had but one heart and one soul:" what is this but the counterpart of that divine prayer, "that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me"?¹

¹ Acts iv 7, 8.

² In Acta, Hom. 8, n. 2.

II. To take another point. The office² of authoritative teaching is in the New Testament closely connected with the power of working miracles. Christ said, "If I had not come and spoken to them, they would not have sin; but now they have no excuse for their sin": and he likewise added, "If I had not done among them the works that no other man hath done, they would not have sin: but now they have both seen and hated both me and my Father."³ He shows that, while faith depended on preaching and authoritative instruction, these also needed the power of works to conciliate conviction. In accordance with which, when he first sent out his Twelve to preach, he not only charged them what to say, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand,"⁴ but added the fullest miraculous power, "heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast

¹ Acts ii 44; iv 32; John xvii 21.

² Passaglia, p. 157.

³ John xv 22-24.

⁴ Matt. x 7.

out devils." And when more solemnly sending them, not to one people, but to all nations, "Go ye into the whole world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," he adds their warrant, "these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name they shall cast out devils, they shall speak with new tongues, they shall take up serpents:" and the Evangelist subjoins, "They going forth preached everywhere, the Lord working withal, and confirming the word with signs that followed."¹

Remembering, then, this very close connection between the authority of Apostolic teaching and the power of working miracles, we may fix a criterion for recognizing the exercise of the supreme office in teaching. Suppose any one of the Apostles to have been invested at the beginning of the Church with this office, how may he be ascertained? If any one is found invariably the first to announce the word of truth, and likewise to confirm it with miracles, you may suppose him to be that one. Suppose, again, that Luke intended to represent one of the Apostles as the supreme teacher. How may it be safely inferred? If, in the course of his narration, he continually exhibits one as eminent above all the rest in preaching the Gospel and guaranteeing it by signs. These are not tests arbitrarily chosen, but naturally suggested. And both exactly fit to Peter, and to Peter alone. For he, in this history of the universal Church, is the first, nay, well-nigh the only one, both to preach and to support his preaching by miracles. And Luke takes pains to relate no less his miracles than his discourses, and scarcely describes with any detail either the one or the other, of any but Peter.

¹ Mark xvi 15-17.

Nay, his mode of writing suggests a parallel between himself and St John in his Gospel, as if it were no less Luke's intention to show Peter invested with the supreme office, than John's to set forth Christ as the head and teacher of the Apostolic college; and no less Luke's purpose to accredit the Church by Peter's miracles, than John's¹ by the miracles of Christ to establish faith in him as the true son of God. For the circumstances of each narration point to this similarity of design. As St John subordinates the group of Apostles entirely to the figure of Christ, so Luke, very slightly sketching the rest, is profuse in detail of what concerns Peter, and marks him as set over all. As John in recording the miracles of Christ dwells on the points which prove his divine mission and origin from the Father, so Luke directs his narration to exhibit the beginning, the growth, and the authority of the Church as due to Peter's miracles. We will mark two further resemblances. First, the miracles which Luke records of Peter seem cast in the same type as those of Christ. Compare the first one with that told by John, ch. v:

John v 5-9: "There was a certain man there that had been eight and thirty years under his infirmity. Him when Jesus had seen lying, and knew that he had been now a long time, he saith to Acts iii 2-8: "And a certain man, who was lame from his mother's womb, was carried, whom they laid every day at the gate of the temple, which is called Beautiful. He, when he had him, Wilt thou be made whole? The infirm man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pond. For whilst I am coming another goeth down before me. Jesus said to him, Arise, take up thy bed, and walk. And immediately the man was made whole, and he took up his bed and walked."

¹ John xx 21.

seen Peter and John about to go into the temple, asked to receive an alms. But Peter, with John, fastening his eyes upon him, said, Look upon us. But he looked earnestly upon them, hoping that he should receive something of them. Peter said, Silver and gold I have none, but what I have, I give thee. In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, arise and walk. And taking him by the right hand, he lifted him up, and forthwith his feet and soles received strength, and he, leaping up, stood, and walked."

How often had the hand of the Lord—as here that of Peter—healed the sick, given the blind sight, cured the leper, and raised the dead! But if Peter's miracle in healing Æneas of the palsy carries¹ one back immediately to the poor man let down through the roof before our Lord, there is a yet more exact identity between the great miracle of Christ raising Jairus' daughter and Peter raising Dorcas. In the one case, the Lord "having put them all out, taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying, and taking the damsel by the hand, he said to her, Talitha cumi, which, is, Damsel, arise, and immediately the damsel rose up and walked." In the other case, Peter came into the upper chamber, “and all the widows stood about him weeping—and they being all put forth, Peter, kneeling down, prayed, and turning to the body, he said, Tabitha, arise. And she opened her eyes, and seeing Peter, she sat up,¹ and giving her his hand he lifted her up.” But how perfect the resemblance of the following:

¹ Compare Acts ix 33, with Mark ii 3-11.

Luke iv 40: “And when the sun was down, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them to him. But he, laying his hands on every one of them, healed them. And devils went out from many.”

Acts v 15: “Insomuch that they brought forth the sick into the streets, and laid them on beds and couches, that, when Peter came, his shadow, at the least, might overshadow any of them, and they might be delivered from their infirmities. And there came also together to Jerusalem a multitude out of the neighbouring cities, bringing sick persons, and such as were troubled with unclean spirits, who were all healed.”

The second point of resemblance is, that the multitude regarded Peter among the Apostles as before they had regarded Christ: for, putting the rest of the Apostles in the second place, they flocked to him, and besought his aid. So that Luke, briefly saying of them, that “by the hands of the Apostles were many signs and wonders wrought among the people,”² goes on to Peter, and of him relates the unheard-of wonders just described, assigning to the miracles wrought by him, “that the multitude of men and women who believed in the Lord was more increased.” It is just as when “there came to Jesus great multitudes, having with them the dumb, the blind, the lame, the maimed, and many others; and they cast them down at his feet, and he healed them.”¹ And the fuller the resemblance these incidents show between Peter and Christ, the more evident their proof that Peter’s ministry must be considered a continuation of that which Christ began.

¹ Mark v 40; Acts ix 39.

² Acts v 12-14.

III. We proceed² to the order predetermined by our Lord in the propagation of his Church.

Of himself he had said, though the Redeemer of all, that he was not sent—that is, as an Apostle—actually to preach, “save to the lost sheep of the house of Israel”: and on first sending his Apostles, he gave them this commission, “Go ye not into the way of the Gentiles, and into the city of the Samaritans enter ye not, but go ye rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” But when about to ascend to the Father, he tells them, “You shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and you shall be witnesses unto me in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and Samaria, and even to the uttermost part of the earth”:³—that is, that they should set up his kingdom through all the world, proceeding by gradual steps, from Jerusalem to Judea, thence to Samaria, and at length “to every creature” in the whole world.

Now, the history of the Acts shows the exact accomplishment of this order, and it likewise shows that Simon Peter was the one elected chief instrument for carrying out these successive propagations of the

¹ Matt. xv 30.

² Passaglia, p. 163.

³ Matt. xv 24; x 5; Acts i 8.

Church. What we have said already shows this as to the mother Church of Jerusalem, and, before proceeding to the Gentile Churches, we will trace the same instrumentality as used to bring the Samaritans into the universal kingdom.

The persecution ensuing on the proto-martyr Stephen's death caused, by our Lord's providence, the dissemination of many believers through Judea and Samaria, while the Apostles alone remained at Jerusalem. Amongst those who thus "went about preaching the word of God," Philip the deacon came to Samaria, and many of the people, hearing his words and seeing his miracles, were converted and baptized. But the Church thus begun by the preaching of the deacon would have dried up without hope of progress, had it not received the assistance of those whom Christ had set in the place of fathers, and who could bestow the gifts of the Holy Ghost. For "the Church is in the bishop,"¹ and, as St Jerome said of a faction which had a deacon for its author, "With the man the sect also perished, because a deacon could ordain no clerk after him. But it is not a Church which has no priest." Accordingly when "the Apostles, who were in Jerusalem, had heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John,"² who "laid their hands upon them, and they received the Holy Ghost." The providence of Christ, then, so ordered the propagation of his kingdom as to choose Peter and John to complete and perfect the Samaritan

¹ St Cyprian, Ep. 69. St Jerome, Dialogue con. Luciferianos.

² Acts viii 14.

Church. But was this on equal terms, or is no superior dignity and authority apparent in Peter over John? A regard to the words of Luke, and the series of acts recorded, will prevent such a misconception. For he mentions Peter and John, but he sets Peter first; and in his record of what happened to Simon, John acts the second part, and it is Peter alone who teaches, commands, judges, and condemns, with authority, as the head and supreme ruler. Simon Magus, tempted by beholding the gifts of the Holy Spirit visibly bestowed by imposition of the Apostles' hands, "offered them money," to both Peter and John. But Peter alone replies, and condemns his profaneness, enlarges on his guilt, and solemnly declares that the gifts of God are not purchasable with money. "Keep thy money to thyself to perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money;" he discloses Simon's secret thoughts, "for thy heart is not right in the sight of God." He inflicts on him excommunication, "thou hast no part nor lot in this matter"; he exhorts him to repent, "do penance therefore from this thy wickedness, and pray to God, if perhaps this thought of thy heart may be forgiven thee." Now here John, the next of the Apostles in rank, is with Peter, yet he does not speak, teach, or enjoin: Peter does all this singly. He answers Simon's question, lances and probes the most secret wound of his conscience, declares how divine gifts are given, proscribes the plague of simony, orders penance, and inflicts excommunication on a scandalous public offender. Thus the twenty-second of the Apostolic Canons runs, "If any bishop, priest or deacon, hath obtained this dignity by money, let him and his ordainer be deposed, and altogether be deprived of communion, as Simon Magus was by Peter." Nothing but an inequality of rank between Peter and John will account for Luke's narration here. Now, if John was inferior to Peter, much more the rest.

But there is another proof of his superiority here, in that God caused Simon Peter to engage Simon Magus. Thus, by his providence, "reaching from end to end mightily, and ordering all things sweetly," the first-born of Christ is brought to conflict with the "first-born of the devil," the chief of teachers with the earliest of heretics, and prime of that long brood of the evil one, who are to persecute "the seed of the woman." Thus ancient writers record that Peter afterwards went to Rome on purpose to expose the acts of this same Simon. Thus they mention his engaging with the famous Alexandrine Apion, the enemy of the Jewish and the Christian faith alike. And thence, too, probably the very ancient writer (whoever he was) of the Epistle of Clement to St James, begins it by recording how "Simon, for his true faith and his firm grounding in doctrine, was appointed to be the foundation of the Church, and for this very reason by Jesus Himself with most true augury had his name changed to Peter, the first-fruits of our Lord, the first of the Apostles, to whom first the Father revealed the Son, whom Christ with reason blessed . . . he who, as the most able of all, was commanded to illuminate the West, the darker quarter of the world, and who was enabled to succeed."

But as to what is said, that "the Apostles who were in Jerusalem sent to the Samaritans Peter and John," it must be remembered, that at the head of those thus sending was Peter himself, and that next to him John was the most distinguished of the Apostolic college. And since it is evident from all that we have hitherto seen, that in whatever concerned the Apostles equally, Peter took the leading part, and in their common deliberations exercised the initiative, it must be concluded that he was likewise the first author of this resolution, to send himself and John to the Samaritans. And this is confirmed by our seeing that in the fulfilment of this mission he discharges the offices, and acts with the authority of head. To none else could the execution of a fresh advance in the propagation of the Church be committed; and so great, besides, were the jealousies between the Jews and Samaritans, that it needed no less than Peter's authority to induce the Jewish converts to receive them into the bond of the same society.

IV. But now we¹ draw nigh to the revelation of that great "mystery which in other generations was not known to the sons of men—that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs, and of the same body, and co-partners of his promise in Christ Jesus by the Gospel," whereby was brought to pass the prophecy, "from the rising of the sun even to the going down my name is great among the Gentiles, and in every place there is sacrifice, and there is offered to my name a clean oblation."² The hour was come "when the true adorers were to adore the Father in spirit and in truth" throughout every region of the world purchased with the blood of the Son of God, and of this event, expected during four thousand years, God, by an unexampled honour, disclosed to Peter, and through Peter, the time and the manner. This greatest of purposes, after his own ascension, Christ left to be revealed through him to whom he had committed the feeding of his sheep.

¹ Passaglia, p. 174.

² Eph. iii 5; Mal. i 11.

While Peter¹ was “passing through all”—that is, exercising his general supervision as primate of the Church—God sent his angel “in a vision manifestly” to “a certain man in Cesarea named Cornelius, a centurion of that which is called the Italian band, a religious man, and fearing God with all his house, giving much alms to the people, and always praying to God.” And the angel says to him: “Thy prayers and thine alms are ascended for a memorial in the sight of God, and now send men to Joppa, and call hither one Simon, who is surnamed Peter: he will tell thee what thou must do.” Though God then sends an angel, it is left to Simon, who is surnamed Peter, to declare his counsel, in what affected the salvation of innumerable souls. Other Apostles there were to whom had been said equally, “Go ye into the whole world and preach the Gospel to every creature,” and “Ye shall be witnesses to me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth”; and “as the Father hath sent me, I also send you.” Yet putting aside all these, as on so many other occasions, Peter is preferred, and that because to him alone was said, “on this rock I will build my Church,” and again, “Feed my lambs, be shepherd over my sheep.” Fitting it was that, when the wall between the Jews and Gentiles should be taken away, by him specially all should be collected into one, on whom, as the divinely laid foundation, all were to rest. Fitting, again, that the Lord's prophecy, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; those also I must bring; and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd," should be fulfilled chiefly by his ministry to whom the Lord had committed his own office of universal visible pastor. For the Church, in her very birth, and in the whole process of her growth, bore this upon her forehead, that universality as well as unity belonged substantially to Peter, and that it was no less his function to gather up all nations into the mould of unity by his ministration as the one chief shepherd, than to embrace them all in the wide circuit of his love. Therefore it is a marvellous agreement in which the institution of the Primacy has a corresponding execution; and as the latter confirms the former, so from the former you might anticipate the latter before it was recorded in the sacred history.

¹ Acts ix 32.

But in the meantime, while the messengers of Cornelius were approaching the house in which Peter was a guest, "there came upon him an ecstasy of mind, and he saw the heavens opened, and a certain vessel descending, as it were a great linen sheet let down by the four corners from heaven to the earth, wherein were all manner of four-footed beasts, and creeping things of the earth, and fowls of the air." While Peter is fixed in contemplation, "there came a voice to him, Arise, Peter, kill and eat," that he might understand how "by his preaching he was to make a sacrifice to the Lord of those who were represented by these animals, bringing them into the divine service through the mysteries of the Lord's passion."¹ And Peter, not yet understanding, replies, "Far be it from me, for I never did eat anything that is common or unclean." Then the heavenly "voice spoke to him again the second time, That which God hath cleansed, do not thou call common. And this having been done thrice, presently the vessel was taken up into heaven."

Here three things are set forth: first, that as the ark of Noe contained all sorts of animals, clean and unclean, so the fold of Christ was to gather from Jews and Greeks and barbarians "a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations and tribes and peoples and tongues";² secondly, that the blessings of Christ concerned all who did not reject the proffered grace; thirdly, that the elaborate system of Mosaic ordinances concerning meats, rites, and ceremonies, had fallen to the ground. But to whom is disclosed, first and immediately, this whole dispensation of the first principles on which the Church was to be propagated? To none other than Peter, "To me hath God shown to call no man common or unclean." Now, the undoubted knowledge of this dispensation must appear of the greatest moment, whether in itself, or as concerns the Jews, of whom the earliest Church consisted, or the Apostles, by whose ministry it was to be extended. And yet, by that providence which is ever over his Church, the wisdom of God so ruled it that through Peter alone the Apostles should be taught when they were first to approach the Gentiles, and discharge their office of witnesses before all nations without distinction. And that because he had made Peter “ the greater one ” and “ the leader ” of all, and put him in his own place, and constituted him supreme teacher in these words, “ Confirm thy brethren.” Thus Epiphanius,¹ in the fourth century, says that the charge of bringing the Gentiles into the Church was laid upon all the Apostles, “ but most of all on holy Peter.” Why this most of all? Because, while he had heard with the rest, “ Make disciples of all nations,” he had singly and peculiarly received the charge of the whole fold, and of the Apostles as part of it.

¹ Bede on this text.

² Apoc. vii 9.

But Peter, still pondering on the vision, hears a fresh voice from the Spirit, “ Behold, three men seek thee. Arise, therefore, get thee down, and go with them, doubting nothing, for I have sent them.” He accompanies the messengers and finds Cornelius, “ his kinsmen and his special friends.” He asks why they have sent for him, whereupon Cornelius informs him of what had passed, and concludes, “ Now therefore all we are present in thy sight, to hear all things whatsoever are commanded thee by the Lord.” Peter in reply sets forth to them the heads of Christian doctrine, and as he comes to the words “ to him all the prophets gave testimony, that by his name all receive remission of sins, who believe in him,” “ the Holy Ghost fell upon all them that heard the word ” of life and truth from his lips. And the Jewish Christians who were with him, being astonished at this reception of Gentiles into the Church by the Holy Spirit’s visible descent, Peter cries, “ Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" "Words," says St Chrysostom,¹ "of one almost assaulting any that would forbid, and say that should not be," and so "he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus"; for Peter also, like his Lord,² preached in person, but baptized by the hands of others.

¹ Hær. 28, s. 3.

Are not then the prerogatives of Peter written legibly on this whole narration? First, among all the Apostles he alone is chosen to consecrate to God the first-fruits of the Gentiles. Again, through him, as the teacher of all, God makes known to the Apostles themselves when the door was to be opened to the Gentiles. Thirdly, without advising with the rest, he enlarges the fold of Christ, which in Christ's place he ruled, with the accession of the Gentiles. Fourthly, the building of the Church is thus referred to him alone. Further, he gathers up to himself the Church which is made out of Jews, Samaritans, and Gentiles: as the foundation he sustains the whole; and when constructed, he binds it together. Lastly, Luke, without having recorded a single speech of any other Apostle, has given five of Peter, thus showing that Peter's words, as well as his actions, had a higher importance than theirs in the history of the Church's birth and growth; for, indeed, in the history of the head that of the body is included.

On Peter's³ return to Jerusalem, "the Apostles and brethren who were in Judea, having heard that the Gentiles also had received the word of God,"⁴ "they

¹ Hom. 24 in Acta, n. 1.

³ Passaglia, p. 181.

² John iv 2.

⁴ Acts xi 1-4.

that were of the circumcision contended with him," because he had "gone in to men uncircumcised, and ate with them." Hereupon Peter set forth to them the whole series of events, upon which "they held their peace and glorified God, saying, God then has also to the Gentiles given repentance unto life." Now, some in late times have attempted to derogate from Peter's authority on the strength of this incident. On the other hand, St Chrysostom, not satisfied with setting forth Peter's rank, and assigning his whole apology to a most gracious condescension, continues, "See how he defends himself, and will not use his dignity as the Teacher, for he knew that the more gently he spoke with them, the surer he was to win them."¹ And what expression can signify Peter's rank more markedly than the Teacher? And Gregory the Great sets forth Peter's distinctions, how he alone had received the keys, walked on the waters, healed with his shadow, killed with his word, and raised the dead by his prayer. Then, he continues, "and because warned by the Spirit, he had gone in to Cornelius, a Gentile, a question was raised against him by the faithful, as to wherefore he had gone in to the Gentiles, and eaten with them, and received them in baptism. And yet the same first of the Apostles, filled with so great a grace of gifts, supported by so great a power of miracles, answers the complaint of the faithful by an appeal not to authority but to reason. . . . For if, when blamed by the faithful, he had considered the authority which he held in holy Church, he might have answered, that the sheep entrusted to the shepherd should not venture to censure him. But if, in the complaint of the faithful, he had said anything of his own power, he would not have been the teacher of meekness. Therefore he quieted them with humble reason, and in the matter where he was blamed even cited witnesses. If, therefore, the Pastor of the Church, the Prince of the Apostles, having a singular power to do signs and miracles, did not disdain, when he was censured, humbly to render account, how much more ought we sinners, when blamed for anything, to disarm our censurers by a humble defence.”¹

¹ In Acta, Hom. 24, n. 2.

Here it occurs to observe with what different eyes Holy Scripture may be read, for just where persons determined to deny Peter’s authority find an excuse for their foregone conclusion, the Fathers draw arguments to praise the moderation with which he exercised that same superior authority.

V. But² founded as we have seen the Church to have hitherto been, and at each step of its course advanced, mainly by the authority of Peter, it could not hope to remain in a vigorous and united state without the continual exercise of judicial and legislative power, and diligent inspection. Nor is there, in fact, one of these which Peter did not exercise, and that in a manner to indicate the ruler set over all. For as to the judicial power, do we not hear him saying, “Tell³ me whether you sold the land for so much”; and “Ananias, why hath Satan tempted thy heart, that thou shouldst lie to the Holy Ghost, and by fraud keep part of the price of the land? Whilst it remained did it not remain to thee? And after it was sold, was it not in thy power? Why hast thou conceived this thing in thy heart? Thou hast not lied to men but to God." And presently the sentence comes forth from him who binds in heaven as well as on earth. "Behold the feet of them who have buried thy husband are at the door, and they shall carry thee out." Here, then, we have Peter, in the midst of the Apostles, yet acting singly as the supreme judge, and defender of ecclesiastical discipline, on which St Chrysostom says, "For Peter was terrible, punishing and convicting the thoughts, to whom they adhered the more both for the sign, and his first speech, and his second, and his third. For he it was who did the first sign, and the second, and the present, which seems to me double, one to convict the thoughts, and another to kill with his command." Then, asking why nobody had announced her husband's death to Saphira, "This was fear of the Teacher, this respect of the disciples; this obedience:"¹ where he is mentioned not as a teacher, but the supreme and chief one.

¹ Lib. 9, Ep. 39.

² Passaglia, p. 188.

³ Acts v 8, 3.

Yet though the other Apostles were judges, with power to bind and to loose, though they were present, and concerned, for "Ananias bringing a certain part, laid it at the feet of the Apostles," not of Peter only, it was not they, but Peter, who entered on the cause of Ananias and Saphira, passed sentence, and inflicted punishment. Why did he judge singly a cause which was brought before the common tribunal of the Apostles? Because Peter was to have the Primacy in all things; because from him the model of ecclesiastical judgements was to be taken; because the charge of maintaining ecclesiastical discipline belonged in chief to him as the head.

¹ In Acta, Hom. 12.

VI. But no less¹ markedly does Luke represent Peter as everywhere visiting the Churches, providing for them as universal pastor, and exercising herein the administrative Primacy. "The Churches," he says, "throughout all Judea, and Galilee, and Samaria, had peace, being edified and walking in the fear of the Lord, and were multiplied by the consolation of the Holy Ghost. And it came to pass that Peter, as he passed through, visiting all, came to the saints who dwelt at Lydda."² In illustration of this we may remember Paul's charge to Titus:³ "For this cause I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and shouldst ordain priests in every city, as I also appointed thee." And again, what Luke writes of Paul himself: "After some days Paul said to Barnabas, Let us return and visit our brethren in all the cities wherein we have preached the word of the Lord, to see how they do."⁴ And what Eusebius,⁵ from St Clement, relates of St John, that he visited with authority the Churches of Asia, which he had either founded, or specially attended to. By these passages we see the nature of Peter's visitation, that it was pastoral, and likewise the difference between his and these others, for they were local, but his universal. Titus acted in Crete, the special sphere of his labour, to which St Paul the founder of that Church had appointed him. Paul and Barnabas propose to visit "our brethren in every city in which we

¹ Passaglia, p. 190.

² Acts ix 31.

³ Titus i 5.

⁴ Acts xv 36.

⁵ Hist. Ecc. Lib. 3, ch. 2.

have preached the word of the Lord"; St. John exerts visitatorial power over the Churches of that province wherein he dwelt, and that too, apparently, when he was the sole survivor of the Apostolic college, yet did not go into other parts. But Peter's charge is œcumenical, and therefore his visitation universal. He inspects the labours of others, as well as his own. For he was not the only Apostle at Jerusalem, nor had he singly built up all the Churches of Judea, Galilee, and Samaria, yet he alone makes a progress from Jerusalem to all these Churches. Though not the Bishop of Jerusalem, over which the Apostle James presides, he goes everywhere, as "the Bishop of Bishops."¹ No other reason coherent with Scripture can we find for this universal inspection of Peter; for all the Apostles were indeed pastors, but he alone set over the whole fold; he alone not limited, like Paul, "to the brethren in every city wherein he had preached." He differs from all others as the universal from the particular, and so St Chrysostom says of him in this very passage, "Like a general he went round surveying the ranks, seeing what portion was well massed together, what in order, what needed his presence. Behold him making his rounds in every direction."²

VII. Further,³ we may see the deference paid to this supreme authority of Peter by the Apostles and Ancients at Jerusalem, on occasion of that severest dissension which threatened the unity of the Church, and kindled the greatest agitation, the question whether

¹ So called by Arnobius, on Psalm cxxxviii.

² In Acta, Hom. 21, n. 2.

³ Passaglia, p. 192.

Gentile converts should be bound to obey the Mosaic ritual law. For “the¹ Apostles and Ancients having assembled to consider of this matter,” after “there had been much disputing, Peter, rising up, said to them.” But why does Peter first rise and decide the cause? Because he was first of the Apostles, and as such supreme arbiter in controversy. But consider what he says: “Men and brethren, you know that in former days God made choice among us, that by my mouth the Gentiles should hear the word of the Gospel, and believe.” By my mouth, he appeals to their knowledge of his election by God to the singular privilege of receiving the Gentiles: in virtue of that election he claims and exercises authority. “And God, who knoweth the hearts, gave testimony, giving unto them the Holy Ghost, as well as unto us, and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith.” God, therefore, has already decided this controversy, by my ministry, whom he especially called thereunto, and by the effects which he caused to accompany it. Then, using words full of force, being, indeed, very like those in which he had answered to Ananias and Saphira, he continues, “Now, therefore, why tempt you God, to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples, which neither our fathers nor we have been able to bear? But by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, we believe that we shall be saved, in like manner as they also.” “How full of power are these words,” is the comment of Chrysostom;² “he says here what Paul has said at great length in the Epistle to the Romans.” And then, speaking of the heads of Paul’s doctrine, he adds, "The seeds of all this lie in Peter's discourse." This, then, is a decision, and given in no hesitating manner, but with severe censure of those who maintained the opposite, as "tempting God," words suitable for him only to use who had authority over all. But how did the Council receive them? Though "there had been much disputing before," though the keenest feelings had been excited, and the point involved the strongest prepossessions of the Jewish converts, "all the multitude held their peace." They acquiesced in Peter's judgement, and now readily "heard Barnabas and Paul telling what great signs and wonders God had wrought among the Gentiles by them." It follows, then, that on a capital point, and in the first Council of the Church, Peter occupied a position which befits only the supreme judge of controversies, so that had we no other evidence than this place whereby to decide upon his rank and office, his pre-eminence would be evident. "See," says St Chrysostom, "he first permits a discussion to arise in the Church, and then he speaks."¹

¹ Acts xv 6.

² Hom. 32, n. 1.

But is this affected by other persons likewise speaking and voting, as Paul and Barnabas? or by St James likewise giving his sentence, as an Apostle? or by the whole matter being settled by common consent? As little as to be head involves being all; as to preside over the rest takes from them the power of deliberation and resolution. Rather it is the office of the head and the president to take the initiative, and point out the course which others are to follow.

For those here present were teachers, and had the prerogative of hearing and judging, as well as Peter; they were bound to weigh the matter in controversy to the best of their power, and to decide on it according to the proportion of faith. They stood to Peter in a relation, not of simple obedience, as the ordinary members of the flock, but of judges, who, though responsible to his superintendence, yet are really judges, pass sentence, and decree by inherent authority. It is no part of the idea of a judge, that he should be supreme and irresponsible: this is the special privilege of the one supreme judge. Objections such as these, therefore, do not take from Peter his Primacy and quality of head, but claim for Paul, Barnabas, James, and other Apostles, the judicial authority and office, which they undoubtedly possessed.

¹ Hom. 32, tom. ix, p. 250.

Nor again, that not Peter only, but all, passed the decree in common, as it is written: "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost, and to us"; and as Paul and Timothy "delivered to the cities the decrees to keep that were decreed by the Apostles and Ancients."¹ For a decree made in common by many shows not an equality of power in each, but a competent authority to join in that decree. Such acts proceed, not only from equal, but from unequal assemblies. A question, therefore, terminated by common decision, and laws established by common consent, do indeed prove a power to deliberate and decree common to all participating, but do not prove that all and every of the judges were equal in their privileges, for who gives to the Ancients the same authority as to the Apostles?

¹ Acts xv 28; xvi 4.

This inequality is elsewhere established, and rests on its own proof, but bearing it in mind, we shall see that Peter is the first and chief author of this common decree, and that laws passed by common consent depend on him primarily as head. Most unsuspecting witnesses of this are the ancient writers, and this is the very conclusion which they drew from the account of this Council. Thus, Tertullian, in the second century, speaking of Peter's singular prerogatives, says, "On him the Church was built—that is, through him; it was he who handled the key. This is it. 'Ye men of Israel, hear these words. Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you,' etc. He, too, first by Christian baptism opened the approach of the heavenly kingdom, by which offences, heretofore bound, are loosed, and those not loosed are bound, according to true salvation. And Ananias he bound with the chain of death: and him that was weak in his feet he delivered from his disease. But likewise, in that discussion as to maintaining the law, Peter, first of all, instinct with the Spirit, and preluding with the vocation of the Gentiles, says, "And now why tempt ye the Lord by imposing a yoke on the brethren, which neither we nor our fathers have been able to bear? But by the grace of Christ we believe that we shall be saved, as also they.' This SENTENCE both loosed what was given up of the law and kept binding what was reserved."¹ As clearly, St Jerome, in the fourth century, writes, that Peter "used his wonted freedom, and that the Apostle James followed his sentence, and all the Ancients at once acceded to it, and that the decree was drawn up on his wording."¹ A little later Theodoret wrote to St Leo, thus: " If Paul, the preacher of the truth, the trumpet of the Holy Spirit, hastened to the great Peter, to carry from him the solution to those at Antioch, at issue about living under the law; much more do we, poor and humble, run to your Apostolic throne, to receive from you healing for the wounds of the Churches."² Why does he here call Peter the great, or say that Paul hastened to him for solution of a grave contention? Did not Paul go to all the Apostles? But Peter was the head among them, and had a power in chief—a power above the rest, a " more special " power—of binding and loosing.

¹ De Pudicitia, c. 21.

VIII. One other³ instance there is of Peter's superior dignity, and therefore importance, in the Apostolic college, which if, perhaps, less direct than some of the foregoing, is even more persuasive. For there was an Apostle associated, as we have seen, by our Lord with Peter and John in several favours not granted to the rest; one who with John received from him the name of Boanerges; the elder brother of John, who with him had once asked to sit on the Lord's right hand and on his left in his kingdom. Now, Luke is led in the course of his narrative to mention the martyrdom of this great and favoured Apostle; the first likewise of the Apostolic choir who drank, as he had promised, of his Lord's chalice, and sealed his labours and trials with his blood. The occasion was a great and striking one. It is thus recorded by Luke: " And at the same time

¹ St Jerome, Ep. 75, inter Augustinianas, tom. ii, p. 171.

² Theodoret, Ep. 113, tom. iii, p. 984.

³ Passaglia, p. 197.

Herod the King stretched forth his hands to afflict some of the Church. And he killed James, the brother of John, with the sword." This is the first and the last time that he is mentioned by himself in Luke's inspired history of the universal Church. Great as he was, so eminently favoured by his Lord, the elder brother of John, nothing is said of the Church's anxiety for his danger, her prayers for his release, her sorrow at his loss, or her exultation at his triumph by witnessing unto blood. He passed to his throne in heaven with this short record. The more emphatic is the contrast following: "And seeing that it pleased the Jews, he proceeded to take up Peter also. Now it was in the days of the azymes. And when he had apprehended him, he cast him into prison, delivering him to four files of soldiers to be kept, intending after the pasch to bring him forth to the people. Peter therefore was kept in prison. But prayer was made without ceasing by the Church unto God for him." That is, by the instinct of self-preservation she prayed for her head. A few years later another Apostle, after glorious labours by land and sea, and missions of unrivalled success, was seized and imprisoned in this same city of Jerusalem, and in danger of his life. But we do not hear of prayers being offered up without ceasing even for Paul, the doctor of the nations. The Church's safety was not bound up with his, any more than with that of James, and therefore not even of the great preacher "in labours more abundant than all," are we told that in the hour of danger "prayer was made without ceasing by the Church unto God for him." James and Paul were most distinguished members, but Peter was more. This was an honour reserved for the head alone, as the life of the head was peculiarly precious to the whole body. Thus St Chrysostom explains it: "The prayer is a proof of affection: they all sought for a Father, a kind Father."¹ And then Luke proceeds to give at length Peter's delivery out of prison by the angel, and his departure in safety to another place. But there is no other solution of such a difference in recording what happened alike to James, to Peter, and to Paul, but that Peter held the place of father in the Lord's family, of commander in his army, of steward in his household, delivering to each of his servants their measure of wheat in due season.

The result,² then, of our particular inquiry in the Acts is to demonstrate two things, that Peter discharged the office of Father and Head in the Lord's family, and that the Church received and admitted him when so acting, with a consciousness that such was the will of Christ.

Now, this office did not consist in "lording it" over his brethren, in assuming high titles, and interfering with the ministry of others when exercised in its due course, in rejecting their assistance, or impeding the unanimous exercise of their counsel. On the contrary, the Lord had before prescribed that "the greater" among them should be as the younger, and "the leader" as he that ministers, proposing to them himself as the great model, who had exercised the highest power with the utmost gentleness, and, being "the Lord," had become "the servant of all." What, then, did this office of Primate consist in? We must say that Peter was undoubtedly such, if he constantly exercised the power of a head in building up the Church, in maintaining discipline, in reconciling dissensions, and in general administration. Now, it would be doing Peter wrong to suppose that he usurped as peculiar to himself what equally belonged to all the Apostles; or that, having received the special power of the Holy Ghost, he did not fulfil his own advice to others, "not to lord it over the clergy, but to be made a pattern of the flock."¹ And the four points just mentioned may be reduced to a triple authority, a Primacy magisterial, judicial, and legislative. Let us take in at one glance what has been said of Peter in regard to each of these.

¹ In Acta, Hom. 26, n. 2.

² Passaglia, p. 198.

As to the magisterial, or power of authoritative teaching and general administration, Peter is constantly taking the lead, he is the mouthpiece of the Apostles: he alone, or he first, by teaching plants the Churches; he alone, or he in chief, completes them when planted. He it is who by divine revelation given to himself discloses to the rest the dispensation of God; and he in words full of power sets forth to these assembled in council the course which they are to pursue.

As to the judicial, none other judgements are found in that portion of the Acts which contains the history of the whole Church, save those of which he was either the sole or the chief author. Alone he took cognizance of Ananias and Saphira, and alone he punished them. And Simon he censured in chief, and excommunicated.

¹ 1 Pet. v 3.

As to the legislative, Peter alone promulgated the law as to receiving the Gentiles; alone he prescribed that for abrogating the Mosaic ceremonial ordinances. He was the chief author of the decree which expressed in terms his own previous act, and was put forth in common by the Apostles and Ancients.¹

Again, compare the institution of the Primacy with its exercise. Its institution consisted in three things: (1) That Peter was named by Christ the foundation of the Church, with whom its whole fabric was most intimately to cohere, and from whom it should derive visible unity and impregnable strength; (2) that the authority of universal pastor, and the care of the whole fold, was committed to him; (3) that to him belonged the confirmation of his brethren, and a power of the keys to which all were subject. Now consider the execution.

As foundation of the Church, he gathers up to himself congregations from the Jews, the Samaritans, and the Gentiles.

As universal pastor, he collects from these three the flock, nourishes, defends, inspects it, and fills up one place of highest rank in the ministry forfeited by the traitor.

As confirmer of the brethren, he disclosed to them the heavenly vision signifying the universal calling of the Gentiles and the abrogation of the Mosaic law. He acts in the Lord's household as the bearer of the keys, going to all parts, defending and inspecting all. By himself he binds and looses, calling Ananias and

¹ "Princeps hujus fuit decreti," says St Jerome to St Augustine, Ep. 75, n. 8, inter Augustinianas.

Saphira to his tribunal, and excommunicating the first heretic.

So exactly, then, do the institution of the Primacy and the acts of Peter fit into each other, that from the former you may predict the latter, and from the latter prove the former. They are like cause and effect, or an a priori and an a posteriori argument. They are a reciprocal confirmation to each other; just as if by time you calculate the sun's rising, and see the diffusion of his light, from his having risen you infer his light, and from his light conclude that he has risen.

Nor in the Apostolic Church does any one appear to resist or question this office of Peter. Rather upon him all eyes are fixed, for him all are anxious; no Abiram rises up against him with the words of rebellion: "Thou takest too much upon thee, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them: wherefore then liftest thou up thyself above the congregation of the Lord?"¹ No Aaron in a moment of delusion cries, "Did the Lord speak by Moses only? Hath he not spoken also by us?"

Yet Peter acts not like one out of a number, and occasions of contention are not wanting, strong prepossessions and keen feelings.² He is everywhere; his pre-eminence and his control are universal: he can act with severity, and there are some impatient even of a just control. When Ananias and Saphira fell dead at his feet, none murmured. When he exclaimed, in full council, "Now, therefore, why tempt you God?" the whole multitude was silent. When he explained the reception of the Gentiles, those who had murmured "held their peace, and glorified God."¹

¹ Num. xvi 3; xii 2.

² Acts vi 1; xv 2; xi 2.

But had Peter not possessed, by divine commission, the authority which he exercised, it is clear, from the conduct of Paul, that he would have met with opposition from each in proportion of his advance in Christian perfection. Paul's censure to his indulgence to the prejudices of the circumcision, proceeding as it did from charity, shows this. But what would Paul, and what would the other Apostles have done, had they seen Peter perpetually taking the lead, and exercising the power of a head, without any special title thereto? Would they not have resisted him to the face and before all, and declared that there was no difference of authority between them? Yet not a trace of such resistance appears, while on numberless occasions the Apostles, and the whole assembly of the faithful, yield to him the Primacy, a sign truly that they recognized in him one who had received the place of Christ as visible head among them.

Infinite indeed is the distance between Christ and Peter, as to the headship of mystical influx and the source of grace. Neither he nor any creature has part with Christ as to this latter, of which Paul writes, "that God had set all things under his feet, and given him to be head over all to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of him who filleth all in all." Again, "the husband is the head of the wife, as Christ is the head of the Church, and he is the Saviour of his body": and all this "to present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing."² In this sense headship belongs to Christ, not only first and chiefly, but absolutely and solely. As to the headship of external government and visible unity, to this Christ himself has in a measure associated Peter by saying to him specially, "Feed my sheep—follow thou me."

¹ Acts xi 18.

² Eph. i 22; iv 15; v 23, 27.

And observe how that divine injunction was fulfilled. For as, following our Lord with loving gaze through the Gospels, we see every object grouped about that heavenly figure of his; as our eyes rest ever upon him in the synagogue, in the market-place, among the crowd, before the Pharisees, the elders, the chief priests, healing the sick, raising the dead, supporting and animating his disciples—so turning to the Acts we see a human copy indeed of that divine portrait, but still one wrought by the Holy Spirit out of our redeemed flesh and blood. We see the fervent Apostle treading in his Master's steps, the centre and the support of his brethren, the first before the Council and before the people, ready with his words and his deeds, uttering to the dead, as the echo of his Lord, "Arise," and healing the sick with his shadow. With reason, then, do the inspired writers use of Peter and of Christ similar forms of speech, and as they write, "Jesus and his disciples," "there went with him his disciples," "there he abode with his disciples," so they write, "Peter standing up with the Eleven," "they said to Peter and to the rest of the Apostles," "Peter and the Apostles answering." What, above all, is remarkable is to observe the same proportion between the figure of Peter and the Apostles in the first twelve chapters of the Acts, as between the figure of our Lord and the Apostles in the Gospel. Such was the power and the will of the Divine Master when he said, "Feed my sheep; follow thou me." Such the truth of the disciple, answering, "Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee."

CHAPTER VI

TESTIMONY OF ST PAUL TO ST PETER'S PRIMACY

IN leaving the Gospels and the Acts we quit those writings in which we should expect, beforehand, that divine government to be set forth, which it pleased our Lord to establish for his Church. In exact accordance with such expectation we have seen the institution of the Apostolic college, and of St Peter's Primacy over it, described in the Gospels, and the history in the Acts of its execution and practical working. Both institution and execution have been complete in their parts, and wonderfully harmonious with each other. But in the other inspired writings of the New Testament, comprising the letters of various Apostles, and specially St Paul, we had no reason to anticipate any detailed mention of Church government. The fourteen Epistles of St Paul were written incidentally on different subjects, no one of them leading him to set forth, with any exact specification, that divine hierarchy under which it was the pleasure of the Lord that his Church should grow up. Moreover, it so happened that¹ the circumstances of St Paul's calling to be an Apostle, and the opposition which he sometimes met with from those attached to Jewish usages, caused him to be a great defender of the Apostolic dignity, as bestowed upon himself, and continually to assert that he received it not of men, but of God. Had there, then, been no recognition at all of St Peter's superior rank in the Apostolic college to be found in his writings, it would not have caused surprise to those who consider the above reasons. And proportionably strong and effective is the recognition of that rank, which, though incidental, does occur, and that several times. If, then, St Paul, being so circumstanced, selected expressions which seem to indicate a distinction of dignity between the Apostles and St Peter, they claim a special attention, and carry a double force. Now, on putting these together, we shall find that they show not merely a distinction of dignity, but a superior authority in Peter.

¹ Passaglia, p. 206.

The first are four several passages in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, in all of which St Peter holds the higher place, and in two is moreover mentioned singly, whilst the rest are mentioned only in mass. These are the following: "Now this I say, that every one of you saith, I indeed am of Paul; and I of Apollo; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ." Again: "All things are yours, whether it be Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present or things to come, for all are yours, and you are Christ's, and Christ is God's." Again: "Have we not power to carry about a woman, a sister, as well as the rest of the Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas?" And once more: "That he was seen by Cephas, and after that by the Eleven."¹ First, we may remark that the place of dignity in a sentence varies² according to its nature: if it descends, such place is the first; but if it ascends, it is the farthest point from the first. Now in the first instance the discourse ascends, for what can be plainer than that it terminates in Christ, as in the supreme point? "Every one of you saith, I indeed am of Paul, and I of Apollo, and I of Cephas, and I of Christ;" so St Chrysostom observes, "It was not to prefer himself before Peter that he set him last, but to prefer Peter even greatly before himself. For he speaks in the ascending scale:" and Theodoret, "They called themselves from different teachers; now he mentioned his own name and that of Apollo; but he adds also the name of the chief of the Apostles."¹ As plain is this in the second instance, where St Paul, developing his thought, "all things are yours," adds, "whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas," or if that be not sufficient, "the world" itself, which, carried away in a sort of transport, he seems to divide into its parts, "or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all," I repeat, "are yours": but only, you are not your own, "you are Christ's, and Christ is God's." In all which, from human instruments who plant and water, he rises up to God, the ultimate source, the beginning and the end. Stronger yet is the third passage, for being in the very act of setting forth the dignity of his own Apostolate, "Have we not power," he says, "to lead about a sister, a woman, as well as the rest of the Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord, and Cephas?" Now, whether "the rest of the Apostles" here means those who in the looser signification are so called, as "the Apostles of the Churches," and “Andronicus and Junias—who are of note among the Apostles,”¹ or the original Twelve, the ascending scale is equally apparent. For why is Peter distinguished by name from all the rest? Why alone termed by his prophetic name? St Chrysostom, again, tells us why. “Look at Paul’s wisdom. He puts the chief the last. For there he puts that which was strongest among the principal. For it was not so remarkable to show the rest doing this, as him that was chief, and had been entrusted with the keys of heaven. And he puts not him alone, but all, as if he would say, whether you look for inferiors, or superiors, you have examples of all. For the brethren of the Lord, being delivered from their first unbelief,² were among the principal, though they had not reached the height of Apostles, and, therefore, he put them in the middle, with the highest on the two sides:”³ words in which he seems to indicate that Peter was as excellent among the Apostles, as they among the rest of the disciples, and the Lord’s brethren.

¹ 1 Cor. i 12; iii 22; ix 5; xv 5.

² Passaglia, pp. 124-126.

¹ St Chrys. in 1 Cor., Hom. 3, n. 2. Theodoret on text.

Of the superiority contained in the fourth passage, we have spoken above, under another head, and therefore proceed to much more remarkable testimonies of St Paul.

In the Epistle to the Galatians, St Paul has occasion⁴ to defend his Apostolic authority and the agreement of the Gospel which he had preached with that of the original Apostles. After referring to his marvellous conversion, he continues, “immediately I condescended not to flesh and blood; neither went I to

¹ 2 Cor. viii 23; Rom. xvi, 7.

³ In 1 Cor. Hom. 21, n. 2.

² John vii 5.

⁴ Passaglia, p. 208.

Jerusalem to the Apostles, who were before me, but I went into Arabia, and again I returned to Damascus. Then, after three years, I went to Jerusalem, to visit Peter, and I tarried with him fifteen days. But other of the Apostles I saw none, saving James, the brother of the Lord." At length, then, St Paul goes to Jerusalem, and that with a fixed purpose, "to visit Peter." But why Peter only, and not the rest of the Apostles, and the brethren of the Lord?¹ Why speaks he of these, and of James himself besides, as if he would intimate that he had little care of seeing them? No other answer can be given to such queries than is shadowed out in the prophetic name of Peter, and contained in the explanation of it given by Christ himself, "Upon this Rock I will build my Church."

For, to prove this, let us go back once more to witnesses beyond suspicion, who wrote a thousand years before the denial of Peter's Primacy began. The Greek and Latin Fathers see here a recognition of his chief authority. Thus Theodoret, "Not needing doctrines from man, as having received if from the God of all, he gives the fitting honour to the chief." Theodoret follows St Chrysostom, who had said, "After so many great deeds, needing nothing of Peter, nor of his instruction, but being his equal in rank, for I will say no more here, still he goes up to him as to the greater and elder"; his equal in the Apostolic dignity and the immediate reception of his authority from Christ, but yet his inferior in the range of his jurisdiction, Peter being "greater and elder." And he goes on, "He went but for this alone, to see him and honour him by his presence. He says, I went up to visit Peter. He said not to see Peter, but to visit Peter, as they say in becoming acquainted with great and illustrious cities. So much pains he thought it worth only to see the man." And he concludes, "This I repeat, and would have you remember, lest you should suspect the Apostle, on hearing anything which seems said against Peter. For it was for this that he so speaks, correcting by anticipation, that when he shall say, I resisted Peter, no one may think these words of enmity and contention. For he honours the man, and loves him more than all. For he says that he came up for none of the Apostles save him." Elsewhere, St Chrysostom, commenting on the charge, Feed my sheep, asks, "Why, then, passing by the rest, does he converse with him (Peter) on these things?" And he replies, Peter "was the one preferred among the Apostles, and the mouthpiece of the disciples, and the head of the band: therefore, too, Paul then went up to visit him rather than the rest."¹ Tertullian, the most ancient of the Latins, says, "Then, as he relates himself, he went up to Jerusalem for the purpose of becoming acquainted with Peter—that is, according to duty and the claim of their identical faith and preaching":² the duty which Paul had to Peter; the claim which Peter had on Paul. In the fourth century Marius Victorinus observes: "After three years, says he, I came to Jerusalem: then he adds the cause, to see Peter. For if the foundation of the Church was laid in Peter, as is said in the Gospel, Paul, to whom all things had been revealed, knew that he was bound to see Peter, as one to whom so great an authority had been given by Christ, not to learn anything from him.”¹ The writer called Ambrosiaster, as his works are attached to those of St Ambrose, and contemporary with Pope Damasus (A.D. 366-384), remarks, “It was proper that he should desire to see Peter, because he was first among the Apostles, to whom the Saviour had committed the care of the Churches.” St Jerome, more largely, says, ‘Not to behold his eyes, his cheeks, or his countenance, whether he were thin or stout, with nose straight or twisted, covered with hair, or as Clement, in the Periods, will have it, bald. It was not, I conceive, in the gravity of an Apostle, that after so long as three years’ preparation, he could wish to see anything human in Peter. But he gazed on him with those eyes with which now he is seen in his own letters. Paul saw Cephas with eyes such as those with which all wise men now look on Paul. If any one thinks otherwise, let him join all this with the sense before indicated, that the Apostles contributed nothing to each other. For even in that he seemed to go to Jerusalem, in order that he might see the Apostle, it was not to learn, as having himself too the same author of his preaching, but to show honour to the first Apostle.”² Our own St Thomas sums up all these in saying, “The doctor of the Gentiles, who boasts that he had learnt the Gospel, not of man, nor through man, but instructed by Christ, went up to Jerusalem, conferred concerning the faith with the head of the Churches, lest perchance he might run, or had run, in vain."¹

¹ Gal. i 16-19.

¹ Theodoret and Chrysostom on the text, and on John, Hom. 88.

² De Præsc., c. 23.

¹ Comm. in Gal. i 18. Mai nova collectio, tom. 3.

² Ambrosiaster and St Jerome on the text.

These last words lead us attentively to consider the passage which follows in St Paul. At a subsequent period the zealots of the law had raised against him a report that the Gospel which he preached differed from that of the Twelve. At once to meet and silence such a calumny, he tells us that "after fourteen years, I went up again to Jerusalem, with Barnabas, taking Titus also with me. And I went up according to revelation, and," assigning the particular purpose, "conferred with them the Gospel which I preach among the Gentiles, but apart with them who seemed to be something; lest, perhaps, I should run, or had run, in vain." Then, having proved the identity of his doctrine with that of those who "seemed to be something"—that is, Peter, James, and John—though to him they "added nothing," he specifies Peter among these, and proceeds to draw a singular parallel between, on the one hand, Peter, as accompanied by James and John, and himself, as working with Barnabas and Titus. If we set the clauses over against each other, this will be more apparent:

When they had seen that	as to Peter was that of the
to me was committed the	circumcision;
Gospel of the uncircumcision,
For he who wrought in	wrought in me also among
Peter, to the Apostleship of	the Gentiles;
the circumcision,

¹ St Thomas Cant. Epist., lib. i. 97.

James,¹ and Cephas, and gave to me and Barnabas John, who seemed to be the right hands of fellow-pillars, ship;

where it would appear that James and John stand in the like relation to Cephas as Barnabas and Titus, just before mentioned, to Paul. And St Chrysostom, who, it must be remarked, reads Cephas, and not James, first, as do some manuscripts and many Fathers, observes, "Where it was requisite to compare himself, he mentions Peter only, but where to call a testimony, he names three together, and with praise, saying, 'Cephas, and James, and John, who seemed to be pillars.'" And further, Paul "shows himself to be of the same rank with them, and matches himself not with the rest, but with the leader, showing that each of them enjoyed the same dignity ”¹—that is, of the Apostolic commission, and the divine co-operation. And Ambrosiaster explains the parallel: “ Paul names Peter only, and compares him to himself, as having received the Primacy for the founding of the Church, he being in like manner elected to hold a Primacy in founding the Churches of the Gentiles, yet so that Peter if occasion might be, should preach to the Gentiles, and Paul to the Jews. For both are found to have done both.” And presently, “ By the Apostles who were the more illustrious among the rest, whom for their stability he names pillars, and who were ever in the Lord’s secret council, being worthy to behold his glory on the mount ” (here Ambrosiaster confuses James the brother of the Lord with James the brother of John), “ by these he declares to have been approved the gift which he received from God, that he should be worthy to hold the Primacy in the preaching of the Gentiles, as Peter held it in the preaching of the circumcision. And as he assigns to Peter for companions distinguished men among the Apostles, so he joins Barnabas to himself: yet he claims to himself alone the grace of the Primacy as granted by God, like as to Peter alone it was granted among the Apostles.”²

¹ An argument has been drawn by some against St Peter's Primacy from St Paul here placing St James first. Now as to this we must remark that some most ancient manuscripts, and the original Latin version, read "Peter, and James, and John," and that this is followed by Tertullian, Chrysostom, Ambrose, Ambrosiaster, Augustine, Theodoret, Jerome, Irenæus, Gregory of Nyssa, and Cassiodorus, of whom Jerome is the more important, in that he had studied so many ancient commentaries before writing his own. But supposing that the vulgar reading is the true one, Peter's being once placed by St Paul between St James and St John will not counterbalance the vast positive evidence for his Primacy. Those who wish to see the probable reasons why St James was here placed first, may consult Passaglia, b. 1, c. 14, who treats of the question at length. Perhaps St Paul, narrating historically a past incident, recalled them to his recollection in the order of time in which they received him: and St James, residing constantly at Jerusalem, might very probably have seen him first.

Now, Baronius proves that the above words cannot be taken of a division of jurisdiction, and that the singular dignity of Peter is marked in them. “ For as a mark of his excellence Christ himself, who came to save all men, with whom there is no distinction of Jew and Greek, was yet called ‘ minister of the circumcision,' by Paul (Rom. xv 8), a title of dignity, according to Paul's own words, for theirs was 'the adoption of children, and the glory, and the testament, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises,' while 'the Gentiles praise God for his mercy.' But just as Christ our Lord was so called minister of the circumcision, as yet to be the pastor and Saviour of all, so Peter too was called the minister of the circumcision, in such sense as yet to be by the Lord constituted (Acts ix 32) pastor and ruler of the whole flock. Whence St Leo, 'Out of the whole world Peter alone is chosen to preside over the calling of all the Gentiles, and over all the Apostles and the collected Fathers of the Church, so that though there be among the people of God many priests and many shepherds, yet Peter rules all by immediate commission, whom Christ also rules by sovereign power.'"¹

¹ St Chrys. in Gal., c. 2.

² Comm. on Gal. ii 7, 8.

The parallel, then, drawn by Paul between himself and Peter, distinctly conveys that as he was superior to Barnabas and Titus, and used their co-operation, so was Peter among the Apostles, and specially the chief ones, James and John, as their leader and head. For what is the meaning of the words, "He who wrought in Peter to the Apostleship of the circumcision"? Was the Apostleship of the circumcision entrusted to Peter only? It needs no proof that it was also entrusted to James and John, nay, Paul himself immediately says so: "They gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowship, that we should go unto the Gentiles, and they unto the circumcision." Why, then, does Paul so express himself as to intimate that the Gospel of the circumcision was given to Peter only? For the same reason that he said that to himself "was committed the Gospel of the uncircumcision," and that God "wrought in me also among the Gentiles." Now Barnabas likewise had been separated¹ by the Holy Ghost himself for the Gentile mission; Barnabas, too, and Titus were discharging the office of ambassadors for Christ among the Gentiles: "that we," Paul says, not I, "should go to the Gentiles." The terms, therefore, used by Paul both of himself and Peter, do not exclude the rest, but express the superiority of the one named singly before the rest, as if he alone held the charge. Their fittest interpretation, then, will be, "The Apostles saw that the Gospel of the uncircumcision was no less given to me above the rest than the Gospel of the circumcision to Peter above the rest; for he who wrought in Peter above the rest in the Gospel of the circumcision, wrought also in me above the rest in the Gospel of the uncircumcision." But what can set forth St Peter's dignity more remarkably than to exhibit him in the same light of superiority among the original Apostles as St Paul was among St Barnabas and his other fellow-workers?

¹ Baron. Ann. A.D. 51, § 29. St Leo, Serm. 4.

Further confirmation of this is given by the argument with which he refutes the calumny urged against him of disagreement with the Apostles. For while he appeals to them in general, and to his union with them, he likewise specifies the point which favoured that union. It was the parallel between himself and Peter, as we have seen; it was the exact resemblance between his mission and that of Peter, which was the cause of their joining hands: they approve Paul's Apostleship because they see that it follows the type of Peter's.

¹ Acts xiii 2

And other words of Paul which follow prove not only the point of his own cause, but the source of Peter's singular privileges. "But when Cephas was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed: for before that some came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles; but when they were come he withdrew, and separated himself, fearing them who were of the circumcision. And to his dissimulation the rest of the Jews consented, so that Barnabas also was led by them into that dissimulation. But when I saw that they walked not uprightly unto the truth of the Gospel, I said to Cephas before them all, If thou, being a Jew, livest after the manner of the Gentiles, and not as the Jews do, how dost thou compel the Gentiles to live as the Jews?" For why did Paul here censure Peter only? By his own account not only Peter, but the rest, and Barnabas himself amongst them, set apart as he was by the Holy Ghost to preach to the Gentiles, did not defend Christian liberty, as they ought to have done. Why, then, does he single out Peter among all these, resist him to the face, and so firmly censure all, in his person? No answer can be given but one: that by this dissembling of Peter the zealots of the law gathered double courage to press against Paul their calumny of dissension from Peter, and to infer that he had run in vain, from the indulgence which Peter showed: that Peter's authority with all was so great that his example drew the pastors and their flocks alike to his side, and that it was requisite to correct the members in the head. From this St Chrysostom proves that it was really the Apostle Peter, which some, as we shall soon see, denied: "For to say that I resisted him to the face, and to put this as a great thing, was to show that he had not revered the dignity of his person. But had he said it of another, that I resisted him to the face, he would not have put it as a great thing. Again, if it had been another Peter, his change would have not had such force as to draw the rest of the Jews with him. For he used no exhortation, nor advice, but merely dissembled, and separated himself, and that dissembling and separation had power to draw after him all the disciples, on account of the dignity of his person."¹ Again, another writer of the fourth century tells us this: "Therefore he inveighs against Peter alone, in order that the rest might learn in the person of him who is the first."² It was, then, Peter's Primacy, and the necessity of agreeing with him thence arising, which led Paul to resist him publicly, and disregarding the conduct of the rest, to direct an admonition to him alone. "So great," St Jerome tells us, on these two passages, "was Peter's authority, that Paul in his epistle wrote, 'Then after three years I went to Jerusalem to see Peter, and I tarried with him fifteen days.' And again in what follows: 'After fourteen years I went up again to Jerusalem with Barnabas, taking Titus also with me. And I went up according to revelation, and conferred with them the Gospel which I preach among the Gentiles,' showing that he *had no security in preaching the Gospel, unless it were confirmed by the sentence of Peter and those who were with him."*¹

¹ Hom. on "I resisted him to the face," n. 15.

² Ambrosiaster on Gal. ii 14.

But this passage,² concerning the reprehension of St Peter by St Paul, has afforded so signal an instance "of the unlearned and unstable wresting Scripture to their own proper destruction,"³ that we must dwell a little longer upon it. First, the Gnostics and the Marcionites quoted it to accuse the Apostles of ignorance, and to favour their own claim to a progressive light. In Peter, they would have it, there was still a taint of Judaism. Next Porphyry, who "raged against Christ like a mad dog,"⁴ tried by this passage to weaken the authority of the Apostles, and to convict Paul of ambition and rashness, who censured the first of the Apostles and the leader of the band, not privately, but openly before all, as St Chrysostom and St Jerome tell us. Julian the Apostate succeeded these, and tried, by means of Paul's contention with Peter, to bring discredit on the religion itself. For who, he asked, could value a religion whose chief teachers were guilty of hypocrisy, ignorance, and ambition? And in complete accordance with the spirit of these, all who, since the sixteenth century, have attempted to impugn St Peter's prerogatives, have rested their chief effort on the exaggeration and distortion of this reprehension. "This," says Baronius, "is the stone of stumbling and rock of offence, on which a great number have dashed themselves. For those, who without any diligent consideration have superficially interpreted a

¹ Epist. inter Augustin., 75, n. 8.

² Passaglia, p. 217.

³ 2 Pet. iii 16.

⁴ St Jerome.

difficult statement, have gone so far in their folly as either to accuse Paul of rashness for having inveighed against Peter not merely with freedom, but wantonness, or to calumniate Peter as a hypocrite, for acting with dissimulation; or to condemn both, for not agreeing in the same rule of faith.”¹

In most remarkable contrast with these stand out three several interpretations, which prevailed in early times, all differing from each other in points, but all equally careful to maintain the dignity of Peter, and to clear up the conduct of Paul. First, from St Clement of Alexandria in the second century up to St Chrysostom in the fourth, we find a number of Greek writers asserting that it was not the Apostle Peter, who was here meant, but another; St Jerome gives their reasons thus: “ There are those who think that Cephas, whom Paul here writes that he resisted to the face, was not the Apostle Peter, but another of the seventy disciples so called, and they allege that Peter could not have withdrawn himself from eating with the Gentiles, for he had baptized Cornelius the centurion, and on his ascending to Jerusalem, being opposed by those of the circumcision who said, ‘ Why hast thou entered in to men uncircumcised, and eaten with them ?’ after narrating the vision, he terminates his answer thus: ‘ If, then, God hath given to them the same grace as to us who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I that I should withstand God ?’ On hearing which they were silent, and glorified God, saying: ‘ Therefore to the Gentiles, also, God hath given repentance unto life.’ Especially as Luke, the writer of the history, makes no mention of this discussion, nor even says that Peter was at Antioch with Paul; and occasion would be given to Porphyry's blasphemies, if we could believe either that Peter had erred, or that Paul had impertinently censured the prince of the Apostles."¹

¹ Ad. Ann. 51, § 32.

But this interpretation, contrary both to internal evidence and to early tradition, and suggested only by the anxiety to defend St Peter's dignity, did not prevail. Another succeeded, supported by St Chrysostom, St Cyril, and the greatest Greek commentators, and for a long time by St Jerome, even more remarkably opposed to the apparent sense of the passage, and only, as it would seem, dictated by the same desire to defend the dignity of St Peter and the conduct of St Paul. Admitting that it was really Peter who was here mentioned, they maintained that it was not a real dissension between the two Apostles, but apparent only, and arranged both by the one and the other, to terminate the question more decidedly. St Chrysostom² sets forth at great length this opinion: "Do you see," says he, "how St Paul accounts himself the least of all saints, not of Apostles only? Now, he who was so disposed with respect to all, both knew how great a prerogative Peter ought to enjoy, and revered him most of all men, and was disposed towards him as he deserved. And this is a proof. The whole earth was looking to Paul; there rested on his spirit the solicitude for the Churches of all the world. A thousand matters engaged him every day; he was besieged with appointments, commands, corrections, counsels, exhortations, teachings, the administration of endless business; yet giving up all these, he went to Jerusalem. And there was no other occasion for this journey save to see Peter, as he says himself: 'I went up to Jerusalem to visit Peter.' Thus he honoured him, and preferred him to all men." Suspecting, too, that an accusation against Peter's unwavering faith might be brought from the words, "fearing those of the circumcision," he breaks out, "What say you? Peter fearful and unmanly? Was he not for this called Peter, that his faith was immovable? What are you doing, friend? Reverence the name given by the Lord to the disciple. Peter fearful and unmanly! Who will endure you saying such things?"

¹ St Jerome on Gal., ch. ii.

² Homily on the text "I resisted him to the face," n. 8, tom. iii, p. 368.

Now compare¹ together these two interpretations of the Greek Fathers with that of the reformers and their adherents since the sixteenth century. A more complete antagonism of feelings and principles cannot be conceived. I. There is not a Greek Father who does not infer the singular authority of Peter from the first and second chapter of the Epistle to the Galatians. There is not an adherent of the reformers who does not trust that he can draw from those same chapters matter to impugn St Peter's Primacy. II. The Greek Fathers anxiously search out every point which may conduce to Peter's praise. The adherent of the reformers suppresses all such, and seems not to see them. III. If anything in Paul's account seems at first sight to tell against Peter's special dignity, the Greek

¹ Passaglia, p. 232.

Fathers are studious carefully to remove it; the adherents of the reformers to exaggerate it. IV. The Greek Fathers prefer slightly to force the obvious meaning of the words, and to desert the original interpretation rather than set Apostles at variance with each other, or admit that Peter, the chief of the Apostles, was not treated with due deference. The adherents of the reformers intensify everything, take it in the worse sense, and are the more at home the more bitterly they inveigh against Peter.

Now turn to the third interpretation, that of the Latin Fathers. They admit both that it was Peter and that it was a real dissension, but they are as anxious as the Greek to defend Peter's dignity. Thus Tertullian:¹ "If Peter was blamed—certainly it was a fault of conduct, not of preaching." And Cyprian:² "Not even Peter, whom first the Lord chose, and upon whom he built his Church, when afterwards Paul disagreed with him respecting circumcision, claimed aught proudly, or assumed aught arrogantly to himself, saying that he held the Primacy, and that obedience rather was due to him by those younger and later." And Augustine: "Peter himself received with the piety of a holy and benighted humility what was with advantage done by Paul in the freedom of charity. And so he gave to posterity a rarer and a holier example—that they should not disdain, if perchance they left the right track, to be corrected even by their youngers—than Paul, that even inferiors might confidently venture to resist superiors, maintaining brotherly charity, in the defence of evangelical truth. For better as it is on no occasion to quit the proper path, yet much more wonderful and praiseworthy is it, willingly to accept correction, than boldly to correct deviation. Paul, then, has the praise of just liberty, and Peter of holy humility, which, so far as seems to me according to my small measure, had been a better defence against the calumnies of Porphyry than the giving him greater occasion of finding fault: for it would be a much more stinging accusation that Christians should with deceit either write their epistles or bear the mysteries of their God.”¹

¹ De Præsc., c. 24.

² Cyprian, Ep. 71.

Now, to see² the fundamental opposition between the Greek and Latin Fathers and the reformers, let us observe more closely these three ancient interpretations of this passage. The first denies that Cephas, so reprehended by Paul, was the chief of the Apostles; the second affirms this, but reduces the whole contention to an arrangement of prudence between the two Apostles; and the third maintains the reality of the reprehension. All three, however, have in common the reconciling Peter’s chief dignity with the reprehension of him, and the two latter, besides, are much more careful to admire his modesty than Paul’s liberty, and make the most of every point in the narration setting forth Peter’s Primacy. On the other hand, the reformers use this reprehension as their sharpest weapon against his authority, praise Paul’s liberty to the utmost in order to depress that authority, hunt out everything against Peter, and pass over everything for him. It is equally evident that their motive in this runs counter to the faith universal in the Church during the first four centuries; and that their inference cannot be accepted without rejecting all Christian antiquity, and the very sentiments expressed by Paul himself, as we have seen, towards Peter.

¹ Ep. 82, n. 22.

² Passaglia, p. 240.

But as to the reprehension itself, it would seem to have been not on a point of doctrine at all, but of conduct. St Peter had long ago both admitted the Gentiles into the Church, and declared that they were not bound to the Jewish law. But out of regard to the feelings of the circumcised converts, he pursued a line of conduct at Antioch which they mistook to mean an approval of their error, and which needed, therefore, to be publicly cleared up. Accordingly, Peter's fault, if any there were, amounted to this, that having, with the best intention, done what was not forbidden, he had not sufficiently foreseen what others would thence infer contrary to his own intention. Can this be esteemed either a dogmatic error, or a proof of his not holding supreme authority? But the event being injurious and contrary to the truth of the Gospel, why should not Paul admonish Peter concerning it? Now, very remarkable it is, that he quotes St Peter's own example and authority, opposes the antecedent to the subsequent fact, and maintains Gospel liberty by Peter's own conduct. St Chrysostom remarked this. "Observe his prudence. He said not to him, Thou dost wrong in living as a Jew, but he alleges his former mode of living, that the admonition and the counsel may seem to come not from Paul's mind, but from the judgement of Peter already expressed. For had he said, Thou dost wrong to keep the law, Peter's disciples would have blamed him.

Now, hearing that this admonition and correction came not from Paul's judgement, but that Peter himself so lived, and held in his mind this belief whether they would or would not, they were obliged to be quiet."¹

¹ Hom. on text, n. 17.

CHAPTER VII

ST PETER'S PRIMACY INVOLVED IN THE FOUR-FOLD UNITY OF CHRIST'S KINGDOM

THE doctrine¹ of St Paul has brought us to a most interesting point of the subject, what, namely, is the principle of unity in the Church. A short consideration of this will show us how the office of St Peter enters into and forms part of the radical idea of the Church, so that the moment we profess our belief in one holy Catholic Church, the belief is likewise involved in that Primacy of teaching and authority which makes and keeps it one.

The principle of unity, then, is no other than "the Word made flesh": that divine Person who has for ever joined together the Godhead and the Manhood. Thus, St Paul speaks to us of God "having made known to us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he purposed in himself, in the dispensation of the fulness of times, to gather together under one head all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth": at whose resurrection, "he set all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all the Church, which is his body, the fulness of him who filleth all in all." And again, "the head of every man is Christ; . . . and the head of Christ is God.” “And we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another:”¹ as again he sets forth at length in the twelfth chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, calling that one body by the very name of Christ.

¹ In this chapter I have availed myself of Passaglia, b. 1, c. 25, and b. 2, c. 11.

With one voice the ancient Fathers² exult in this as the great purpose of his Incarnation. “The work,” says St Hippolytus,³ “of his taking a body, is the gathering up into one head of all things unto him.” “The Word Man,” says St Irenæus,⁴ “gathering all things up into himself, that as in super-celestial, and spiritual, and invisible things, the Word of God is the chief, so also in visible and corporeal things he may hold the chiefship, assuming the Primacy to himself, and joining himself as Head to the Church, may draw all things to himself, at the fitting time.” And again “The Son of God was made Man among men, to join the end to the beginning, that is, man to God”; or, as Tertullian says,⁵ “that God might show that in himself was the evolution of the beginning to the end, and the return of the end to the beginning.” And Œcumenius, “Angels and men were rent asunder: God then joined them, and made them one through Christ.” St Gregory Thaumaturgus breaks out, “Thou art he that didst bridge over heaven and earth by thy sacred body.” And Augustine,⁶ “Far off he

¹ Eph. i 9, 22; 1 Cor. xi 2; Rom. xii 5.

² See Petavius, de Incarn., lib. 2, c. 7 and 8, for the following quotations.

³ Hippolytus, quoted by Anastasius, p. 216.

⁴ Irenæus, lib. iii 18, and iv 37. ⁵ De Monogamia, c. 5.

⁶ Augustine, 21 Tract. in Joannem.

was from us, and very far. What so far off as the creature and the Creator? What so far off as God and man? What so far off as justice and iniquity? What so far off as eternity and mortality? See how far off was 'the Word in the beginning, God with God, by whom all things were made.' How, then, was He made nigh, that he might be as we, and we in him? 'The Word was made flesh.' " "Man, being assumed, was taken into the nature of the Godhead," says St Hilary;¹ and St Chrysostom,² "He puts on flesh, that he who cannot be held may be holden"; "dwelling with us," says Gregory³ of Nazianzen, "by interposing his flesh as a veil, that the incomprehensible may be comprehended." "For since," adds St Cyril,⁴ "man's nature was not capable of approaching the pure and unmixed glory of the Godhead, because of its inherent weakness, for our use the only-begotten one put on our likeness." "In the assumption of our nature," says St Leo,⁵ "he became to us the step by which through him we may be able to mount unto him:" and, "it is not doubtful that man's nature has been taken into such connection by the Son of God, that, not only in that man who is the first-born of all creation, but even in all his saints, there is one and the same Christ: and as the head cannot be divided from the limbs, so neither the limbs from the head. For

¹ Hilary on Psalm 68.

² St Chrys., tom. 5 (Savile), Hom. 106.

³ Greg. Naz. Orat. 36.

⁴ St Cyril, Dialog. 1, de Trin., p. 399.

⁵ St Leo, 5th Serm. on Nativity, c. 4 and 5, 12th Serm. on Passion, c. 3.

though it belong not to this life, but to that of eternity, that God be all in all, yet even now he is the undivided inhabitant of his temple, which is the Church." For all the above is contained in our Lord's own words, "that they all may be one, as thou, Father, in me, and I in thee," on which St Athanasius¹ says, "that all, being carried by me, may be all one body and one spirit, and reach the perfect man":—"for, as the Lord having clothed himself in a body, became man, so we men are deified by the Word, being assumed through his flesh." And another,² interpreting the words, "that they all may be one," "thus I will, that they being drawn into unity, may be blended with each other, and becoming as one body, may all be in me, who carry all in that one temple which I have assumed: the temple, namely, of his body." And lastly, St Hilary³ deduces this not only from the Incarnation, but from the blessed Eucharist. "For, if the Word be really made flesh, and we really receive the Word as flesh in the food of the Lord, how is he not to be thought to remain in us naturally, since, both in being born a man, he assumed the nature of our flesh, never to be severed from him, and has joined the nature of his flesh to the eternal nature under the sacrament of the flesh to be communicated to us?"

So deep in the junction of the divine and human natures in our Lord's adorable person lies the root of unity for that humanity which he purchased with his blood. It is in virtue of this headship that the whole mystical body is one, and “we all members one of another.” By this headship our Lord nourishes and cherishes the Church, and communicates to her incessantly that stream of grace by which she lives. And as this headship flows from the union of the Godhead and Manhood, so it is inseparable from his Person, and incommunicable. But he has himself, in his parting discourse, recorded by St John, dwelt upon the great sacramentum of unity, the result of this Headship, and set it forth as the sign and seal of his own divine mission, and the one convincing proof of his religion’s superhuman origin. By following his words we shall see that this unity is not simple but fourfold, and we shall trace the mutual relation and subordination to the divine Headship of its several kinds.

¹ St Athanasius, Orat. 3, contr. Arian., tom. 1, p. 572. Oxf. Trans. p. 403.

² Ephrem, Patriarch of Antioch, quoted by Photius, cod. 229.

³ St Hilary, de Trin., lib. 8, n. 13.

1. And first, “In¹ that day,” says he—that is, after his own resurrection—“ye shall know that I am in my Father, and you in me, and I in you,” whereby he declares that, in the completion of the dispensation, the union between himself and the faithful shall be such as to image out the mutual indwelling of the Father and the Son. Which again is further expressed, “I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he will take away: and every one that beareth fruit, he will purge it, that it may bring forth more fruit. . . . I am the vine; you the branches: he that abideth in me, and I in him, the same beareth much fruit: for without me you can do nothing. If any one abide not in me, he shall be cast forth as a branch, and shall wither, and they shall gather him up and cast him into the fire, and he burneth. If you abide in me, and my words abide in you, you shall ask whatever you will, and it shall be done unto you.”¹ In these words he sets forth that union of mystical influx, by co-operation with which his disciples keep his words and abide in his love, and of which he is himself the immediate principle.

¹ John xiv 20.

2. But he does not stop at this interior and invisible union between his disciples and himself: he speaks likewise of a new and special command, and of a special gift, by which their union with each other should be known. “A new command I give unto you, that you love one another: as I have loved you, that you also love one another. By this shall all men know that you are my disciples, if you have love one to another.”² And again, “This is my command, that you love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love than this hath no man, that any one lay down his life for his friends. . . . These things I command you, that you love one another.”³ But the Holy Spirit, whom our Lord was about to send forth, is the efficient principle of the love here enjoined, by his substantial indwelling, as we are told, “The charity of God is poured forth in our hearts by the Holy Ghost who is given to us.”⁴ From him, therefore, bestowed by the Head of the Church, springs that unity of charity, which, being itself internal, is shown in outward signs, and constitutes that distinctive spirit of the Christian

¹ John xv 1, 2, 5-7.

² John xiii 34-36.

³ John xv 12.

⁴ Rom. v 5.

people, the spirit characterizing it, and analogous to the national spirit in civil organization.

3. But our Lord likewise speaks of a third unity, springing from the direction of one and the same Divine Spirit. "And I will ask the Father, and he shall give you another Paraclete, that he may abide with you for ever: the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, nor knoweth him: but you shall know him, because he shall abide with you, and shall be in you." "The Paraclete, the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he will teach you all things, and bring all things to your mind whatsoever I shall have said to you."¹ "It is expedient to you that I go: for if I go not, the Paraclete will not come to you; but if I go, I will send him to you." "But when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will teach you all truth. For he shall not speak of himself, but what things soever he shall hear, he shall speak; and the things that are to come, he shall show you. He shall glorify me, because he shall receive of mine, and shall show it to you."² Of the nature of this unity we may judge by the gifts and offices assigned to that Spirit and Paraclete from whom it springs. Now he is repeatedly termed, "the Spirit of truth," and his office, to suggest, to announce, to teach, and to lead into all truth. This unity, therefore, is opposed to the division produced by ignorance and error, and so is the unity of faith, or Christian profession. Thus our Lord promises, besides the unity of charity, that of faith, the efficient principle of which, as well as of the former, is contained in the communication of the Holy Spirit. But it is no less true in the supernatural order of divine gifts, than in the order of nature, that the first cause produces its effects by means of second causes. And here, as often as the Lord promises the Spirit of truth, he promises him to the Apostles, and assures his perpetual abidance with them and the successors in their charge, thus, “That he may abide with you for ever”: “He shall abide with you, and shall be in you.” “He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your mind which I have said unto you”: “Whom I will send unto you from the Father”: “I will send him unto you”: “He shall lead you into all truth”: “He shall show the things that are to come.” And so the unity of faith may be expected from its supreme cause, the Holy Spirit the Paraclete, through the medium of the Apostles and their legitimate successors: the Holy Spirit is its ultimate, but they its subordinate principle: he is the source, but they the channel. Thus to trust to the invisible action of the Spirit, but to despise the office and direction of the teachers ordained by Christ, in the very virtue of that Spirit, is to reject his divine institution, and to risk a shipwreck of the promised gift of faith and truth.

¹ John xiv 16-18, 26.

² John xvi 7, 13-15.

For in exact accordance with our Lord’s words here, St Paul has set forth not only the institution, but the source, as well as the end and purpose, of the whole visible hierarchy. It is instituted by our Lord, as an act of his divine Headship; its source is in “one and the same Spirit dividing to every one according as he will”; its end and purpose is, “the edifying the body of Christ, until we all meet into the unity of faith.”¹

Each of these points is important. Our Lord’s divine Headship over the Church, all-encompassing as it is, and the spring of all blessing and unity, does not dispense with the establishment of a visible hierarchy, but rather is specially shown therein. And again, the Holy Spirit is the source and superior principle of all spiritual gifts to all, but yet he acts through this hierarchy. He is the Spirit who maintains faith and truth, but it is by the instruments of his own appointing.

Now these three points, the bestowal of all spiritual gifts and offices by Christ in virtue of his mystical Headship, the Holy Spirit being the one superior principle of such gifts and offices, and his manifold operation therein through the visible hierarchy, are set forth most distinctly in two passages of St Paul, the twelfth chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians, and the fourth chapter to the Ephesians. “To every one of us is given grace, according to the measure of the giving of Christ. Wherefore he saith, Ascending on high he led captivity captive; he gave gifts to men. Now that he ascended, what is it but because he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended above all the heavens, that he might fill all things. And he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and other some evangelists, and other some pastors and doctors, for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of the ministry, unto the edifying of the body of Christ, until we all meet into the unity of faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the age of the fulness of Christ; that henceforth we be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine by the wickedness of men, by cunning craftiness by which they lie in wait to deceive. But doing the truth in charity, we may in all things grow up in him who is the head, even Christ; from whom the whole body, being compactly and fitly joined together, by what every joint supplieth, according to the operation in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in charity." "And the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man unto profit. To one indeed by the Spirit is given the word of wisdom; and to another the word of knowledge, according to the same Spirit, to another, faith, in the same Spirit; to another, the grace of healing, in one Spirit; to another, the working of miracles; to another, prophecy; to another, the discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another, interpretation of speeches. But all these things one and the same Spirit worketh, dividing to every one according as he will. For as the body is one, and hath many members; and all the members of the body, whereas they are many, yet are one body, so also is Christ. For in one Spirit were we all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Gentiles, whether bond or free, and in one Spirit we have all been made to drink."¹

¹ 1 Cor. xii 11; Eph. iv 13.

Thus, then, we have been brought by the words both of our Lord and of St Paul, through an inward

¹ Eph. iv 7-16; 1 Cor. xii 7-13.

invisible unity, that of mystical influx from the vine to its branches, and again, that of charity, and that of faith and truth, to an outward and visible unity in social organization. The great Head has created it for the purpose of exhibiting, defending, maintaining, and conveying the former, since it is expressly said that he gave it "for the perfecting of the saints, unto the work of the ministry, unto the edifying of the body of Christ," and in order that "we may be no more children tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine." And the inward source and cause of this unity are indeed invisible, being the Holy Spirit of God, sent down by Christ, when he ascended up on high, to dwell permanently among men; but its effects are external and most visible, even the growth of a body "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the age of the fulness of Christ," a body which has an orderly arrangement of all its parts, and a hierarchy of officers to continue till the end of all. And the function of this hierarchy is one never to be superseded, and which none but itself, the organ of the Holy Spirit, can perform—namely, to bring its members "to meet in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God." As our Lord says, in the promise, before his Passion, "I will ask the Father, and he shall give you (the Apostles) another Paraclete, that he may abide with you for ever, the Spirit of Truth," so St Paul of the accomplishment after his ascension, "He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and other some evangelists, and other some pastors and doctors," yet "all these things worketh one and the same Spirit." For as the divine Head took to himself a body, bridging thereby the worlds of matter and of spirit, and as "in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead corporally," so in his Church, in perfect analogy with the Archetype, the visible is the channel of the invisible, and the outward organization is instinct with inward life, and the hierarchy is the gift of the mystical Head, and the instrument of the one sanctifying Spirit. To think otherwise, to disregard the external framework, under a pretence of exalting the inward spirit, is to undo so far the work of Incarnation, and to renew the insanity of those early heretics who in one way or another would "dissolve" Christ; for there is no less "one Body," than there is "one Spirit."

But if his headship of mystical influx is alone and immediately sufficient, as is so often objected, for the maintenance of external unity, to what end is the creation of this visible hierarchy? For the objection that the invisible Headship of Christ renders a visible headship unnecessary, and indeed an infringement on his sole divine prerogative, whatever force it may have, tells not more against an œcumenical head of the Church than against every order and officer of the hierarchy. These all, and with them the whole system of sacraments as well as symbols, become alike unnecessary and even injurious, if each member of the mystical body be knit to Christ immediately without any outward framework. And with what face especially can those maintain that the bishop is the visible head of each diocese, and in being such does not contradict, but illustrate, the Headship of Christ, who yet deny that there is one in the whole Church put in the like place over bishops, and see in such an appointment an infringement on the office of Christ? Such an argument is so profoundly illogical and inconsistent, that one has difficulty in believing it to be seriously held, or is hopeless of bringing conviction to those who cannot see an absurdity.

Let those, then, who confound together the supreme Headship of Christ over his Church, whereby he communicates to it life and grace, with the inferior and subordinate headship of external unity, see to what their objection tends. It stops at nothing short of destroying the whole visible hierarchy and the sacramental grace of which it is the channel. Holy Scripture, on the contrary, tells us in these passages that the providence by which the Church is governed resembles that by which this outward universe is ruled, in the subordination of second causes to the supreme cause. Christ repeats as Redeemer his work as Creator, to give life and force to these second causes, and while he works in the members of his body both "to will and to do," bestows on them the privilege of co-operating with him. Thus the dignity of supreme Head which belongs to Christ, and is incommunicable, no more takes away the ministry of the external head who is charged with the office of effecting and maintaining unity; than it impedes the ministry of "apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and doctors," to whom Christ entrusted the Church, that by their means it might be brought to sanctity and perfection.

4. And these words bring us to the fourth unity mentioned by our Lord. For not until "he ascended up on high" did "he give gifts to men." And this visible hierarchy, the sign and token of his mystical

Headship and fostering care, is by him quickened and informed with the Holy Spirit, when he is himself invisible at the right hand of the majesty of God. This absence, too, is what he foretold, saying, "And now I am not in the world, and these are in the world, and I come to thee; Holy Father, keep them in thy name whom thou hast given me; that they may be one, as we also are. While I was with them, I kept them in thy name. . . . And now I come to thee." These words of our Lord show that it was his will that his believers should be no less one among each other, by an outward and visible union, than they were one by the internal bond of charity, the guidance of one Spirit of Truth, and the influx of the one Vine. And so far we have seen that to guard and maintain that unity under the guidance of the Spirit of Truth, he called forth the visible hierarchy, in all its degrees. But what, then, was the external root and efficient principle of this visible hierarchy, when he was gone to the Father? Did he not likewise provide for the loss occasioned by his own absence, which he had foretold? The argument of St Paul proves that he did so provide, as well as his own words. For St Paul declares the Church to be "one Body." Was it then a body without a head, or a body with a head invisible? Or did the Lord of all, having with complete wisdom framed his mystical body in all its parts and proportions, and having set first Apostles, and then, in their various degrees, doctors and pastors, in one single, and that the main point, reverse the analogy of all his doings? Did he appoint every officer in his household, except the one who should rule all? Did he construct the entire arch, save only the keystone? Did he make a bishop to represent his person, and be the centre of visible unity in every diocese, but none to represent that person in the highest degree and to be the centre of unity to the whole Church? Was it the end of his whole design "to gather together in one the children of God, that were dispersed," in order that there might be "One Fold," and did he fail to add "One Shepherd"? Yet St Paul declares that "there are many members, but one body." How can the distinct and diverse members be reduced to the unity of a body, but by the unity of the head, as the efficient principle? In accordance with which we may observe that never is the image of a body used in Scripture to represent the Church, but it is thereby shown to be visible; and never is it compared with a body as a type, unless that body is shown complete with its head. Such are the well-known images of one House, Kingdom, City, Fold, and Temple, to which we have had so often to appeal. Even the unity of things in themselves dissimilar is derived in Scripture from the unity of the Head. Thus the man and the woman are said in marriage to be one, and that in a great mystery, representing Christ and the Church, but this because "the husband is the head of the wife." And Christ is said to be one with the faithful, because "the head of every man is Christ": and God one with Christ, because "the head of Christ is God." If, then,¹ the Church is one body, it receives, according to the reasoning of Holy Scripture, that property from the unity of its head.

¹ Passaglia, p. 254.

Now, such a one body, while yet militant upon earth, St Paul declares it to be, setting forth at the same time the various orders of its hierarchy. Is it, then, a body complete or incomplete? With a head or without one? For it is no reply to say that it has indeed a head, but one invisible. That invisible headship did not obviate, as we have seen, the necessity of a visible hierarchy: why then does it obviate the like and even more striking necessity, that the hierarchy too must have its visible head? If it was, so to say, the very first act of our Lord's supreme headship over all to the Church—the very token that he had led captivity captive to quicken the visible ministry which he had established by sending down the Holy Spirit to abide with it for ever, is the one place most necessary in that ministry to be the only one left vacant by him? Is the one officer most fully representing himself to be alone omitted? “The perfecting of the saints” (a metaphor taken, as we have seen, from the exact fitting together of the stones in a building), and “the edifying of the body of Christ,” are described as the end to be reached by those to whom “the work of the ministry” is committed; but as this applies in a higher degree to the bishop than to the priest, so it applies in the highest of all to the Bishop of bishops.

Again, God's method of teaching by symbols, which runs through the whole Scripture, and the institution of Sacraments, proves to us his will to lead us on from the visible to the invisible, and to make the former a channel to the latter. For “we are all baptized into one body,” and the outward act both images and conveys the inward privilege. And again in the highest conceivable instance, "because the bread is one, we being many are one body, who all partake of that one bread."¹ In like manner the outward unity of the Church must accurately represent, and answer to the inward, which, we know, is derived from the Person of Christ, who is its Head. And so that Person must be specially represented in the outward unity.

And this is one reason why no unity of a college, whether of Apostles or of bishops, will adequately express that visible headship of which our Lord's Person is the exemplar. For the root of all lies in a personal unity, that of the Godhead and Manhood, and therefore a merely collective or representative unity cannot express it. And if the Apostle wrote, "God hath set in the Church first Apostles," yet he also wrote that the grand result, "the perfecting of the saints, and the edifying of the body of Christ," was due to the ministry, not only of Apostles, but of prophets, evangelists, pastors, and doctors, each in their degree; they all conspire to a joint action, which does not impede the existence of distinct orders in the hierarchy. And his expression that the Apostles are first in this hierarchy without defining their mutual relations to each other, does not exclude those other passages of Scripture which do define those relations, and which make Peter among the Apostles "the First," "the Ruler," "the Greater," the Judah among his brethren, the foundation of the whole building, and the one shepherd in the universal fold. And the more so because St Paul uses three expressions of the Church, two of which are relative, but one absolute.

¹ 1 Cor. x 17.

He calls it "the body of Christ," and "Christ," which are relative; but he also calls it "one body," which is absolute. Now, these expressions are not to be severed from each other, as if each by itself would convey the whole idea of the Church, which rather is to be drawn from them altogether. In answer to what the Church is, we must not say that it is either "the body of Christ," or mystically called "Christ," or set before us as "one body," for it is all of these at once, relatively "Christ," and "the body of Christ," and absolutely "one body."

As, then, the former expressions show that the Church is one in reference to Christ, so the latter shows that it is so in itself and simply. For as the Church is called "Christ," and "the body of Christ," because it is one with Christ by mystical union, drawing its supernatural life from Christ its Head, so it is called "one body," because in the variety of members and parts, of which it consists, no one is wanting to its being one body in itself, and to its being seen to be such. But it would neither be so, nor seem to be so, if it were without a visible head, the origin and principle of its inherent visible unity. And so where the Church is called by St Paul "one body," he declares that it has a visible head.

Thus it is that the inherent notion of the Church, as one visible body, and the whole dispensation by which visible things answer to invisible, as their archetypes, demand one visible head. Now to this inherent necessity let us add the force of positive teaching. When our Lord in almost his last words to his Church prays to his Father, "While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name—but now I come to thee,” does he not suggest the appointment of another visible head to take that place which he was leaving? And further, does he not name one to that high dignity, when he calls him “the Greater,” and “the Ruler” among his brethren, committing them to him to be confirmed by him, and making him the shepherd of the whole flock? What else had he done but prepare them for such a nomination, when he promised one that he should be the foundation of his Church and the bearer of the keys? . What else did Christians from the beginning see in such a one, when they called him the head, the centre, the fountain, the root, the principle, of ecclesiastical unity?

Let us remark, once more, as a confirmation of the above, that the archetype of visible unity in the Church, which our Lord sets before us in his prayer to the Father, is no other than that most high and solemn of all things conceivable, the mutual indwelling of the Father and the Son. “Holy Father, keep them in thy name whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we also are;” and again, for all successive generations of the faithful, “that they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.” Now, the relation established by our Lord between Peter and the rest of the Apostles, by appointing him the visible head of the Church, and between Peter’s successor and all bishops, does represent, so far as earthly things may, and in a degree which nothing else on earth reaches to, the mutual relation of the three divine Persons to each other. For as these are distinct, but inseparable, so, too, are the Apostles. As the fulness of the Godhead is first in the Father and then in the Son and in the Holy Spirit, so the fulness of power first promised and given to Peter, is then propagated to the other Apostles united with him. As in the Father the economy of the divine Persons is summed up under one head and gathered into a monarchy, so in Peter is gathered up the fulness of ecclesiastical power, which, through union with him, is one in all, as the Church is one, and the Episcopate one. Moreover, as it is the dignity of the Father to be the exemplar, principle, root, and fountain of unity in the Trinity, so is it the dignity of Peter to be the exemplar, principle, root, and fountain of visible unity in the kingdom of God, which is the Church. This is alluded to by Pope Symmachus, thirteen hundred and fifty years ago: "There is one single priesthood in the different prelates (of the Apostolic See), after the example of the Trinity, whose power is one and indivisible."¹ And long before him St Cyprian: "The Lord says, 'I and the Father are one.' And again it is written of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, 'And these three are one.' Is there a man who believes that this unity, coming from the divine solidity, cohering by heavenly sacraments, can possibly be broken in the Church, and torn asunder by the collision of adverse wills? This unity he who holds not, holds not the law of God, holds not the faith of the Father and the Son, holds not the truth unto salvation."²

¹ Mansi, Concil., tom. 8, 208.

² St Cyprian, de Unitate.

Whereas, then, all unity in the Body of Christ, the Church, is derived ultimately from the person of its Head, the Word Incarnate, that unity is yet fourfold in its operation, and the efficient principle of one sort is not to be confounded with that of another. There is the mystical unity, which consists in the perpetual divine influx from the great invisible Head to his members; there is the moral or spiritual unity of charity, consisting in the presence of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of believers, and these two are internal and in closest correspondence. There are two likewise external, which may be called the civil or political unity, consisting in the public profession of the same faith, the same truth, for what the law is to temporal states, the faith is to the great spiritual kingdom of Christ. This unity is indeed inspired by the Holy Spirit, but is maintained by him through the visible hierarchy. Lastly, correspondent to the unity of faith, there is the visible unity of external organization, the immediate or efficient principle of which lies in the visible headship over the Church attached by the Lord to St Peter's chair. The latter two, while they correspond to each other, are indeed subordinate to the former, the unity of faith to that of charity, as the unity of the visible headship to that of the invisible. Yet the very truth of the Body which the Lord has assumed, and the whole analogy of his dealings with men, and the sacraments whereby he makes us "partakers of the divine nature," warn us that it is of the highest importance for us to see how external unity is the channel of internal, and the visible the road to the invisible. No words can be more emphatic to this effect than those with which the Apostle introduces the description of the visible hierarchy and the divine headship which called it forth. "There is one Body and one Spirit, as you are called in one hope of your calling. One Lord, one faith, one baptism. One God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in us all." From which he goes on to say, "Ascending up on high, he gave gifts to men—some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." And lastly, "the Head over all things to the Church," is "the Saviour of the Body."¹

But if this be so, we can say nothing more highly to exalt St Peter's office in the Church, for he is the great bond and stay of this outward unity, as even enemies² confess. As surely as in a real monarchy the ¹ Eph. iv 4, 8, 11; i 22; v 23.

² That such was the belief of the most ancient Fathers, Ignatius, Irenæus, Tertullian, Cyprian, and others, see a most curious admission of the Lutheran Mosheim in his dissertation, De Gallorum Appellationibus, etc., s. 13. And his way of extricating himself is at least as curious as the admission. His words are, "Cyprian and the rest cannot have known the corollaries which follow from their precepts about the Church. For no one is so dull as not to see that between a certain unity of the universal Church, terminating in the Roman pontiff, and such a community as we have described out of Irenæus and Cyprian, there is scarcely so much room as between hall and chamber, or between hand and fingers. If the innocence of the first ages stood in the way of their anticipating the snares which ignorantly and unintentionally they were laying against sacred liberty, those succeeding at least were more sharp-sighted, and it was not long in becoming clear to the pontiffs what force in establish-person of the sovereign ties together every part of the political edifice, and is endued with majesty because he is at once the type of God, and concentrates in one the power and dignity of the whole community, so it is in that divine structure in which "the manifold wisdom of God" is disclosed to all creation. The point of strength is felt alike by friend and foe. On the Rock of Peter has fallen every storm which the enmity of the evil one has raised for eighteen hundred years; but yet the gates of hell have not prevailed against it. In the Rock of Peter, and the divine promise attached to it, every heart faithful to God and the Church trusts now, as it trusted from the beginning. Many temporal monarchs in their hour of pride have risen against St Peter's See, but the greatest of them all¹ declared that no one had ever gained honour or victory in that conflict, and he lived to be the most signal instance of his own observation. "God is patient, because he is eternal," and the Holy See prevails in its weakness over power, and in its justice over cupidity, because while temporal dominion passes from hand to hand, and stays not with any nation, following the gift of God which the poet calls fortune—

"Perchè una gente impera, e l'altra langue, Seguendo lo giudizio di costei
 Che è occulta, come in l'erba l'angue,"—²

ing their own power and authority such tenets possessed." So the ancient Fathers were not intelligent enough to see that the hand was joined to the fingers. But the other alternative was still harder to Mosheim, that Lutheranism was fundamentally heretical and schismatical.

¹ Napoleon.

² Dante, Inferno.

the visible kingdom of Christ, which is his Church, lasts for ever and is built upon the Rock of Peter. The long line of descendants from Constantine and from Charlemagne have in their turn impugned and illustrated this glorious privilege of the Papal See. What is there so stable in an empire of commerce, or so solid in the nicely balanced and delicate machinery of a constitutional monarchy, as to exempt them from the action of a universal law, or to ensure their victory in the doomed contest with the Vicar of Christ? Mightier things than they have done their worst, have oppressed, triumphed, and become extinct, and if it be allowed them in the crisis of their trial to crucify Christ afresh, he will yet reign from the Cross, and "draw all men unto him."

CHAPTER VIII

SUMMARY OF PROOF GIVEN FOR ST PETER'S PRIMACY

IT would now seem to be made clear to all that the controversy on St Peter's Primacy relates generally to the question of inequality in the Apostolic college, and specially to the question, whether Christ, the Founder of the Church, set any one of the Apostles, and whom of them in particular, over the rest. For as, on the one hand, there would have been no room for the superior dignity of the Primacy, had all the Apostles been completely equal, and undistinguished in honour and authority from each other; so, on the other hand, it is the nature of the Primacy to be incapable of even being contemplated, save as fixed on some certain definite subject.

But to determine the two questions, whether the Apostles stood, or did not stand, on a complete equality, and whether one of them was superior to the rest in honour and dignity, it seemed requisite to examine chiefly four points.

First, the words and the acts of Christ respecting the Apostles.

Secondly, his expressions which seemed to mark the institution of a singular authority.

Thirdly, the mode of writing and speaking usually and constantly employed by the Evangelists and other inspired writers.

Lastly, the history of the Church, from its beginning, from which might be drawn conjectures, or even certain proofs, of the power which either all the Apostles had exercised equally, or one had held above the rest.

For should it become plain, from the agreement of these four sources, that a certain one of the Apostles, and that one Simon Peter, had been distinguished from the rest by the acts and words of Christ, and set over the Apostles; had been invariably described by the inspired writers as the Head and supreme authority; and, in the history of the rising Church, been portrayed in a way which could only befit the universal ruler, no difficulty would remain, and there would be arguments abundant to prove that Christ was the author both of the inequality among the Apostles, and of Peter's Primacy.

Now we seem to have proved absolutely what we proposed hypothetically. For we have shown that Christ declared by his whole method of acting, and by solemn words and deeds, that he did not account Peter as one of the rest, but as their Leader, Chief, and Head.

We have shown it to have been the will of Christ to concentrate in Peter the distinctions which belong to himself, as Supreme Ruler of the Church. For such must be deemed the properties of being the Foundation, the Bearer of the keys, the Holder of universal authority, the Supporter, and lastly, the Chief Shepherd. Of these there is no one which he did not promise to Peter singly, and confer on Peter singly:

no one with which he did not associate Peter, and Peter only, in making him the foundation of his Church, bestowing on him the keys and universal power of binding and loosing, in setting him over his brethren to confirm them, and over his fold as universal Pastor.

We have shown that the Evangelists place almost the same distinction between the Apostles and Peter, as between Peter and Christ, while still among us. For as they set forth Peter as second after Christ, so do they subject the Apostles to Peter; as the acts and words of Christ occupy the foreground in respect to those of Peter, so do his in respect to those of the Apostles; as Christ, in their histories, is pre-eminent above Peter, so is Peter more conspicuous than the Apostles; and as the Gospels cannot be read without seeing in them Christ as the prototype, so neither can they without seeing that Peter approaches the nearest to Christ.

We have shown that St Paul spoke of St Peter in no other way than the Evangelists, and that his pre-eminence is evident in St Paul's Epistles, as well as in the Gospels.

Lastly, we have shown that Peter shines as the superior luminary in the history of the rising Church. The lustre of his deeds in the Acts recalls that of Christ in the Gospels. In the Gospels Christ is named by far most frequently; in the Acts no one occurs so often as Peter. The discourses, the acts, the miracles of Christ occupy every page of the Gospels; and in that portion of the Acts which embraces the history of the whole Church, a very large part has reference to the discourses, the acts, and the miracles of Peter. In the Gospels, Christ leads, the Apostles follow; in the Acts, Peter takes the precedence, the Apostles attend him. In the Gospels, Christ teaches, and the Apostles, in silence, consent; in the Acts, Peter alone makes speeches, and explains the doctrine of salvation; the Apostles by their silence consent. In the Gospels, Christ provides for the Apostolic college, guards it from injury, defends it when attacked; in the Acts, Peter provides for filling up the place of Judas, determines the conditions of eligibility, enjoins the election, and defends the Apostles before people, rulers, and chief priests, in quality of their head.

Moreover, he alone is pre-eminent in exercising the triple power of authoritative Teacher, Judge, and Legislator. Of authoritative Teacher, not only towards Jews and Gentiles, whom he is the first to join to Christ, so that the same person who was the Church's rock and foundation also became its chief architect; but towards the Apostles likewise. They are taught by his ministry that the time was come for the blessing of redemption to be extended no less to Gentiles than to Jews, and that the burden of legal rites could not be laid on the Gentile converts without tempting God. Of Judge, because, while the Apostles are silent, he is the first to hear the causes of the faithful, to erect a tribunal to examine the accused, to issue sentence, and to support and confirm it by inflicting excommunication. Of Head and Supreme Legislator, both when he singly visits Christians in all parts, and provides for their needs, or when he uses the prerogative of first voting, and draws with authority the wording of the law to which the rest are to give a unanimous consent.

From this compendious enumeration we draw a multifold proof, both of inequality in the Apostolic college, and of Peter's superiority at once in rank and in real government.

I. For, first, a college cannot be considered equal, out of which Christ chose one, Simon Peter, whom, by his words and his actions, he showed to be set over all. Now, Christ's whole course of speaking and acting, of which the Gospels give us the picture, tends to exhibit Peter as chosen out from the rest and set over them. Accordingly, neither is the college of the Apostles equal, nor can Peter be accounted as one of the rest.

II. Again, one who has received all in common with the rest, but much besides peculiar to himself, special and distinguishing, must seem to be taken out of the common number. Now, such must Peter have been among the Apostles, since Christ granted nothing to them which he denied to Peter, but did grant to Peter many most distinguishing gifts which he gave not to the rest.

III. And, further, it is apparent that the Foundation and the Superstructure, the Bearer of the keys, and those who inhabit the house or city whose keys he bears, the Confirmer, and those whom he is to confirm, the universal Pastor, and the sheep committed to his charge, cannot be comprehended under the same order and rank. Now the distinctions expressed by the terms Foundation, Bearer of the keys, Confirmer, and universal Pastor, are Peter's official insignia in reference to, and over, the Apostles themselves. His distinction from them, therefore, and the inequality of the Apostolic college, are plain.

Perhaps this may be put somewhat otherwise even more clearly. And so, IV. Let it be first considered, what is plain in itself, that a distinction carrying pre-eminence depends on distinction in perfection and gifts, and follows in a greater or less degree from the greater or less inequality of these, or in case of their parity exists not at all. Next, be what we hold both of reason and of faith remembered, that "every best gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father of lights," that God is the fountain-head of all good, and that all gifts whatsoever flow over from him to his creatures. From both points it follows that the amount of the creature's dignity and perfection lies in the participation of divine goods, and is greater or less in proportion to the participation and association with divine goods. So, then, the controversy on Peter's Primacy and the inequality of the Apostolic college, comes ultimately to this: whether Christ, the God-man, associated Peter singly, above all, with himself, in the possession of those properties on account of which he stands himself related to the Church as its supreme Ruler. For let it be once evident that Christ did so, and it will of necessity be evident also, not only that Peter was preferred to all, but wherein his leadership and headship consisted. And since we have made the inquiry, there is abundant evidence to prove that Christ really did associate Peter singly in five properties, which, belonging to himself primarily and chiefly, contain the special cause for which he is the Prince and Supreme Head of the Church.

For, in truth, it is specially due to the properties and distinctions of Foundation, Bearer of the keys, Establisher, Chief Shepherd, and Lord, who has received all authority from the Father, that the Church has an entire dependence on Christ, is subject to him, and that he enjoys over the Church the right and authority of Supreme Lord and Ruler. But which of these properties did he not choose to communicate to Peter, according to the degree in which they were communicable? He bestowed them all upon Peter, and upon Peter alone, so that Peter also is termed *the Foundation, the Bearer of the keys, the Confirmer, the universal Pastor, and the Chief*¹ of the whole Church. We see, therefore, a remarkable proof of Peter being distinguished from the rest of the Apostles, and set over them, in his singular and special association with these gifts.

Again, V., to this tends that disposition of divine wisdom which provides that Peter holds in the Church, and among the Apostles, a rank of dignity greatly resembling that which Abraham among the Patriarchs, and Judah among his brethren, received from God. The former of these relations has been exhibited, and shown not to be arbitrarily conceived, but grounded on due proof. The latter will be presently further touched upon. Now who shall deny Abraham that superiority whereby he was made the Father and Teacher of all the faithful, or strip Judah of the dignity in which he excelled his brethren, and was in many points preferred to them? As little may any one strip

¹ ἡγούμενος, Luke xxii 26, the very term still given in the East to the head of a religious community; and also, as has been said, that which marks our Lord in the great prophecy of Micah, recorded in Matt. ii 6.

Peter of his authority as supreme teacher, and take from him those singular endowments which make him "the Greater one" among his brethren and Apostles.

Especially as, VI., this authority of Peter is clearly confirmed by the mode of writing usual to the Evangelists. For it is monstrous and preposterous to confound with the rest one whom the Evangelists constantly distinguish and prefer to all. For what more could they do to show their purpose to distinguish Peter, select him from the rest, and place him at all times before all the Apostles? We may venture to say that they omitted nothing to this end. And so it is absurd to doubt of Peter's prerogatives, or set him on the same footing with the rest.

For, indeed, VII., no one would endure it to be denied, from the usual mode of writing of the Evangelists, that Christ was pre-eminent among the Apostles as their Supreme Head, and was removed from them in dignity by an infinite interval. Now, though the Evangelists do not give Peter all things, nor in the same degree, yet they do give him much, and in a degree not dissimilar, to distinguish him from the rest, showing him, as in a nearer relation to Christ, so proportionably exalted above the other Apostles.

And this proof, VIII., is the more persuasive because St Paul follows the very same mode of speaking as the Evangelists. For in repeatedly mentioning St Peter in his Epistles, he always gives him the place of honour, and joins him as near as may be with Christ. Who, then, can doubt Peter held a certain pre-eminent rank?

And the more, IX., because what is read in the Acts, and the view of primitive history therein contained looks the same way, and seems set forth with the same purpose. For if you compare together the Acts and the Gospels, the mind at once suggests that the position of Prototype which Christ holds in the Gospels, belongs to Peter in the Acts, and that Peter seems distinguished above the rest of the Apostles in the Acts, as Christ is pre-eminent far above all in the Gospels. Now what is the result of so apparent a likeness? What is it fair to deduce from such a bearing in the Evangelical and Apostolical history? Those who are obedient to reasoning, and follow the bright torch of the Scriptures, must confess with us that in this parallelism of both histories, and so of Christ and Peter, is contained a mark and sign, proving that Peter follows next after Christ in dignity and authority.

X. In authority, I repeat, and, therefore, in that kind of superiority which very far surpasses the limits of precedence and order. For what are the grounds on which we see Peter's eminence in the Acts, or a resemblance between the Acts when speaking of Peter, and the Gospels when speaking of Christ? Chiefly these, that Peter is set forth as remarkable, singly, above all, for the use and exercise of the triple power of Judge, Legislator, and authoritative Teacher. Now, the superiority herein asserted not merely distinguishes Peter from the rest, but attaches to him a greater authority over the rest.

XI. And, indeed, propose an hypothesis which is necessary to solve a complex and undoubted series of facts; such an hypothesis is thereby made a certainty. At least these are the principles of philosophy, from which the laws of reasoning will not allow us to depart. Now, Peter's pre-eminence and supremacy are such an hypothesis, without which you can render no sufficient cause of the facts narrated in the first twelve chapters of the Acts. Accordingly, this supremacy of Peter may be considered as proved.

XII. Or to put the argument somewhat differently, thus: As the existence of causes is deduced, a posteriori, from effects, so it is perfectly established, a priori, whenever the series and sum of effects, of which the senses are cognizant, are foretold from it with certainty. We deduce the force of gravity necessarily from its effects, a posteriori, yet we likewise determine it to exist, with a judgement no less invariable, a priori, when it is such that we do not merely guess at, but certainly anticipate its sensible effects. Now, Peter's supremacy is not inaptly compared with this very force of gravity. For it is a characteristic of each to be, in its proper order of things, the source and principle in which effects are involved which afterwards become apparent, whether in this physical universe, or in the supernatural region of the Church.

Suppose, then, Peter to have held the dignity which we claim for him. What happens in the Acts which might not, nay, which should not, have been anticipated? Is it his being mentioned above all, his speaking in the name of all, his constantly taking the lead, and his eminence, as if he were the head? But it could not be otherwise if he alone received from Christ a higher dignity than all the rest. Is it his discharging the office of supreme Judge, Legislator, Teacher, and Doctor? Is not this just what was to be expected from the rank of Head and universal Pastor? The Primacy, then, the large authority, and the unshared majesty of Peter, belong to that class of truths which are indubitably believed on the strength of deduction and rational anticipation.

Having noted, if not all, at least the greater number of those arguments which we have alleged hitherto in favour of our cause, we approach the question which was secondly to be cleared up, what, namely, is the force and nature of that Primacy, which the same arguments prove to belong to Peter. For I know that all Protestants are possessed with the notion that no other pre-eminence should be ascribed to Peter, on Scriptural authority, than one limited to a certain precedency of honour and order. That precedency should be granted Peter they are not unwilling to admit, but supremacy, they stoutly maintain, must not and cannot be allowed him. As to this opinion I consider that it would be much the shorter way to strip Peter utterly of every prerogative, than to attenuate the distinctions applied to him in Scripture to a sort of shadowy precedency. I consider that nothing is so foreign to truth and the Scripture, as on their testimony to allow that Peter was distinguished from the rest of the Apostles, but to confine that superiority within the very narrow bounds of honour and order.

For, first, whence do we most evidently and chiefly draw the greater dignity which Peter clearly possessed above the others? We draw it from the endowments separately bestowed upon him whereby he became the Foundation of the Church, the Supreme Bearer of the keys, the Confirmer of his brethren, and the universal Pastor. But are these names, images, signs, expressing a naked superiority of honour and order, or rather designating an authority of jurisdiction and power? I cannot hesitate to assert either that these forms are most fitted of all to express a singular authority, or that none such exist in language. For, secondly, their force is to ascribe to Peter the main sway, and to mark him as set for the head and leader of all. Who that hears them can, without perverting the natural force of words, or disregarding the laws of interpretation, imagine anything merely honorary, or figure to himself Peter with a mere grant of precedency?

Especially as, thirdly, he is named in Scripture not only as the First, but, comparatively, the Greater, and absolutely, the Superior.¹ Now these terms do, of themselves, and far more if you consider the context of the discourse in which they occur, express a singular authority, and one without rival. An authority, fourthly, kindred to that with which Christ, while yet in his mortal life, presided over the Apostolic college, and administered as Supreme Head the company which he had formed. For we can never sufficiently urge a point which, being in itself most true, is of itself abundantly sufficient completely to set at rest the present controversy. It is this, that Peter's Primacy proceeds from a singular association with those distinctions in virtue of which Christ is considered the Head and Chief, and Supreme Ruler of the Church. So that the more his Primacy is depressed, the more Christ's prerogatives and dignity are lowered; nor can he be confirmed to a precedency of honour and order, without Christ's superiority being shut within wellnigh the same limits.

¹ Πρῶτος, μείζων, ἡγούμενος. See Chapter II.

Besides, fifthly, are tokens wanting in Scripture which disclose the nature of Peter's Primacy? Are there not effects which unfold the force and quality of the cause from which they spring? Such tokens there are in abundance, and such effects manifold. These are, the care with which Peter guarded the Apostolic college; the authority with which he visited Christians in every part; the singular exercise of judicial power, by which he established Church discipline and provided for its maintenance; his acts of authoritative teaching; his drawing the form of laws which were to rule the universal Church; and, in short, the wonderful regard with which that Church followed Peter as its Head, and the Steward of all the Lord's family. What Primacy is it which these tokens set forth? What cause which these effects demonstrate? Is it one limited to a precedency of honour and order? or one pre-eminent by an inherent jurisdiction and authority? It is a point which needs no further words. For if any there be whose minds are not struck by a candid and sincere exposition of facts, you will in vain attempt to persuade them by arguments.

Unless, indeed, sixthly, they allow themselves to be forced out of their prejudice by the Scriptures exhibiting such a Primacy of Peter as compels all others to profess one and the same faith with him, and to maintain one and the same society. For such an obligation could proceed neither from titles of honour nor from precedency. It demanded a stronger cause —none other, in fact, but that supreme authority by which Peter is made head of all.

But we shall feel much more at home in the truth of this deduction, if we inquire a little more deeply into the reasons for selecting one among the rest—namely, Peter—and instituting the Primacy. For the purpose and end proposed in a work have the force of a negative rule by which we may judge with certainty what ought to be done, or could not be left undone. I know well that it does not follow, if anything has been instituted for a certain purpose, that it ought to be endowed only with those properties which appear necessary for the end to be gained; for it may be much more munificently established than the absolute need required. But at the same time I know that there would be a failure in prudence and wisdom in one who, desiring a certain work for a specific end, did not provide it with everything that could be deemed necessary. Thus the knowledge of the intention and purpose is equivalent, if not to a positive rule, determining all and singular the powers bestowed on any institution, at least to a negative, ascertaining what must be given to it, and what cannot be denied to it.

Now, is the purpose for which Christ instituted the Primacy, and honoured Peter with its dignity, unknown, or is it most truly ascertained? The end which moved Christ to make the college of Apostles unequal, and to set Peter as head over it, is it secret, or very conspicuous? There are in all three classes of reasons which enable us to form, not a mere guess, but an ascertained judgement, as to the purpose of Christ in instituting the Primacy. There are typical reasons, drawn from previous shadowings forth of it: there are analogical, derived from relations of resemblance; and there are real, inherent in the testimonies themselves and the Church's endowments. Let us briefly exhibit these in order.

I. By, then, that signal agreement wherewith the two dispensations, the old and the new, correspond to each other, the first in outline and the last as filled up, this rudimentary and that complete, we are plainly instructed that it was Christ's purpose for Peter, in the new dispensation, to bear the character whose lineaments had been traced before in Abraham, and to be eminent among the Apostles for the prerogative which Abraham had possessed among the Patriarchs. Now, Abraham's special prerogative and pre-eminence was this, that no one could share either promise, whether carnal or spiritual, which is expressed in Scripture by "the Blessing," who was not joined with Abraham by a double—that is, a carnal and spiritual, a physical and moral—bond. For to him and to his seed were the promises made, with the condition that only by conjunction with him, and with his seed, they could flow over to the rest. Since, then, in the new dispensation, Peter was to sustain the character of Abraham in the old, and since the only-begotten Son of the Father, having put on the form of a servant, granted to Peter the prerogative which, in prelude of his future order, he had given to Abraham, it is plain that Simon was chosen, honoured with the name of Cephas, and preferred above all, in order that from him as supreme minister of Christ, and by union with him as visible head, all the members of the Church's body might enjoy the blessings and fruits of the Christian institution.

The deductions from this are easy to see. For two things chiefly follow, specially declarative of the nature of the Primacy, and showing its intent to be the cause and efficient principle of that unity by which the Church of Christ is one visible body. First, there follows the duty, laid upon all the faithful, of being joined with Peter, if they would not fall from those promises with which Christ has most bountifully enriched his mystical Body, being no other than that which reverences Peter as its visible head. Secondly, there follows Peter's jurisdiction, in virtue of which he enjoins all to form one communion and society with him, as well as effects, defends, and maintains it. Now, nothing can be stronger than this ordinance of Christ, either to prove a Primacy of supreme jurisdiction, or to unfold its purpose of effecting and maintaining unity.

The same is the bearing of another type, no less remarkable and no less adapted to explain the whole matter. For, as Israel, "according to the flesh," was the shadow of the "Israel of God," which was "according to promise":¹ and as the kingdom of Israel was a type and ensample of the kingdom of heaven, so the twelve sons of Israel, the heads of the Israelitish race, represented and imaged out those Twelve whom Christ chose, made princes in his Church, and endowed with supreme authority to build up that Church's structure, and enrich it day by day with new accessions of spiritual children. Of this type our Lord's words are the strongest guarantee: "Amen,

¹ 1 Cor. x 18; Gal. vi 16.

I say unto you, that you who have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his Majesty, you also shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." And, again, in the very discourse where he sets forth the future Superior, "I dispose to you, as my Father disposed to me, a kingdom: that you may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom; and may sit upon thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

But now, though all the sons of Israel in the former typical kingdom were chiefs, and heads of tribes, yet one of them, that is, Judah, had a special prerogative, which the Scriptures set forth, and which was called the right of the first-born. In virtue of this, on the one hand, Judah was esteemed the lord of his brethren, whom they were to reverence as the parent of the whole family; and on the other, it was only by union with him, and with the seed that was to spring from him, that the other chiefs could count upon the divine blessing. And so the tribe of Judah had a great pre-eminence over the other eleven. It was its prerogative to take the lead:² it had received from God the promise of an authority³ which was not to terminate before the old covenant should be transformed into the new. From it was the seed³ to be expected, which should be the source of blessing to all nations, prefigured as they were by the twelve tribes. The other tribes were bound⁴ to union with it, and to the profession of its religion, on pain of falling into schism and forfeiting the divine covenant. All this was expressed by Jacob in prophetic inspiration, when he addressed Judah as the head and root of his line: "Judah (praise) art thou, thy brethren shall praise thee: thy hand is on the neck of thine enemies: the sons of thy father shall bow down to thee." It remains, then, to ask who was to represent Judah's person in the new kingdom, and on whom Christ bestowed the prerogative, the type and image of which had gone before in Judah. It is most plain that this was Simon Peter, for whom we have, therefore, to claim a double prerogative, the one of being the source and origin, from which no one may be separated without severance from the kingdom and promises of Christ: the other of being the first-born, as betokening excellence, by which he was pre-eminent in the possession of special rights among his brethren, the Apostles.

¹ Matt. xix 28; Luke xxii 29.

² See Num. ii 3-9; x 14; Judg. i 1-3; xx 18.

³ Gen. xlix 10; and see John iv 22. ⁴ 3 Kings xii.

The former prerogative was expressed by the Fathers of Aquileia, when, in the words of St Ambrose, they stated their belief in St Peter's chair: "For thence, as from a fountain-head, the rights of venerable communion flow unto all."¹ The latter is confirmed and illustrated by the solemn expressions so often recurring in Christian records, wherein Peter is called "the Bishop of bishops,"² "the Pastor of pastors,"³ "first prelate of the Apostles,"⁴ "Patriarch of the whole world,"⁵ "universal bishop,"⁶ "Father of

¹ St Ambrose, Ep. 11. ² Arnobius Junior in Ps. cxxxviii.

³ Eucherius of Lyons, Hom. in Vig. St Petri.

⁴ Proclus, Patriarch of Constantinople, on the Transfiguration.

⁵ The Archimandrites of Syria to Pope Hormisdas, Mansi, 8, 428.

⁶ St Bernard, de Cons., lib. 2, c. 8.

fathers,"¹ "having the dignity of pastoral headship," "the most divine of all heads, arch-pastor of the Church."

II. To these reasons, which, as we think, may be called typical, succeed the analogical, which prove with equal evidence the purpose of the Primacy as instituted, and its inherent powers. If we ask what are these reasons from analogy, and to what they point, one only answer can be given commended by any show of truth, that the Primacy was instituted in order that the Church of Christ might seem to be moulded after the analogy of one human body, one house, one kingdom, one city, and one fold. But whence the need that so very remarkable and clear an analogy should be obtained by the institution of the Primacy? Doubtless because the Primacy was created as a principle, by whose virtue and efficiency what was various and manifold should be gathered up into unity, because it was to be a head in which all the diverse members of the ecclesiastical body should be joined, the centre of the Church's circle.

Therefore the reasons drawn from analogy show that the unity of the Church is to be considered the special end for which the Primacy was instituted, and the Primacy itself a principle abundantly provided with all those means by which so admirable a blessing as unity may be first produced and then maintained.

And this is confirmed by another analogy, well worthy of close attention. This consists in the double and reciprocal relation in which the universal Church stands to particular Churches, and the institution of the Primacy to the institution of bishops, who, by

¹ S Theodore Studites to Pope Leo III, lib. i, Ep. 33.

Christ's appointment, govern those particular Churches: an agreement, which ought to have especial force with those who believe in the divine institution of bishops. For as the whole society of true believers, and the particular congregations of which it is made up, are called in Holy Scripture and the Christian records by one and the same name of the Church, so is there the very closest analogy between the bond which connects the universal Church, and that which connects its several parts.

Exactly, then, as it is asserted with great truth of all these particular Churches that they are one house, one city, and one fold, so must this be repeated of the whole Church, since it is set forth in Scripture by no other images, and has no less right to claim the property of unity. Hence St Chrysostom's golden saying, "If it is the Church of God, it is united and one, not at Corinth only, but in the whole world. For the Church is a name not of division, but of union and harmony;"¹ and St Gregory calls it "the tunic without seam, woven from the top throughout."²

Now, the same reason which existed for instituting particular bishops to govern and preserve in unity particular flocks, moved Christ to institute a universal Primate, and to set him over the whole fold. If in the former case the best description of a particular Church is that of St Cyprian, "A people united to its priest, and a flock adhering to its pastor";³ in the latter the form of unity, which Christ established in the universal

¹ In 1 Cor., Hom. I., n. 1.

² St Greg. Naz., Orat. 12, alluding to John xix 23.

³ St Cyprian, Ep. 79.

Primate, no less imposes on all, both taught and teachers, the necessity of saying with St Jerome, "I, following none as the first save Christ, am joined in communion with your blessedness—that is, with the chair of Peter. Upon that rock the Church is built, I know. Whoever outside of this house eateth the lamb, is profane. If any one was not in the ark of Noe, he shall perish. I know not Vitalis; I reject Meletius; I am ignorant of Paulinus. Whoever gathers not with thee, scatters—that is, he who is not of Christ is of Antichrist."¹

III. A great accession of evidence will accrue to what we have said, if we attentively consider the reasons deduced from the texts containing the institution of the Primacy, and those proceeding from the inherent properties of the Church. To speak of the texts first:

1. Either they carry no meaning with them, or they prove at least this, that Christ, in instituting the Primacy, intended,² while exhibiting the whole Church under the usual image of a house and building, to give it a foundation, the bond at once of its strength and unity. Again, while communicating to one the special gift of unwavering faith, our Lord intended to make him the channel for establishing and *confirming*³ all the faithful; to render⁴ the fold which he had gathered out of all nations one by the unity of a supreme visible pastor, and to constitute⁵ one of such eminence as to be the Ruler and the Greater among all.

But can we, or ought we, to conclude from this as to the purpose of the Primacy, and as to its constituent force and principle? Assuredly these texts prove directly and categorically that the Primacy was set up as the efficient principle whereby to mould the Church's visible unity, and was endowed with all that authority, without which unity could neither have been produced nor maintained in existence.

¹ St Jerome, Ep. 57. ² Matt. xvi 18. ³ Luke xxii 31, 32.

⁴ John xxi 15.

⁵ Luke xxii 26.

2. And in this judgement we shall be confirmed if we investigate the properties of which the Church cannot be deprived, without taking a form and an appearance different from that which it received from Christ. The first which occurs is that identity by which the Church must always be like itself, and cannot be substantially different at its beginning and in its growth; one thing when it had Christ for its visible head, and another when his words had come to pass, "A little while, and now you shall not see me because I go to the Father." Now, at its first beginning in the time of our Lord's mortal life, the Church presented the form of a society governed by the supreme power of one, and deriving its visible unity from one supreme visible head. That it might not subsequently lose this identity, and put on another form, our Lord chose a Primate to be the principle of visible unity, and to have the power of head over the whole body.

And indeed this was necessary to maintain the double character and test of *unity*¹ and Catholicity,² by which the Church is distinguished in Holy Scripture and in the records of Christian antiquity. As to unity, not only are the expressions in the creeds, and the more ample explanation of them in the Fathers,¹ most clear and emphatic, but likewise what is said in the Holy Scriptures of the end for which the Church was founded by Christ. For the grace² of God our Saviour hath appeared to all men, instructing those who had³ changed the truth of God into a lie, and liked not to have God in their knowledge, that denying⁴ all these things they might become an acceptable people, and enlightened⁵ by Christ, and sanctified in the truth, might by the profession of one faith be one⁶ body and one spirit, in the same manner⁷ in which the Father and the Son are one, and might be divided⁸ by no sects and dissensions, which are manifestly the works of the flesh, not of God, who is not the God⁹ of dissension but of peace. For therefore Christ,¹⁰ the only-begotten of the Father, gave his blood for it, to present it to himself a glorious Church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing, which would break peace and disturb the agreement of faith. It was to be holy and without blemish,¹¹ immovable through that rock on which it rests, and

¹ Unity. John x 16; xvii 20-23; 1 Cor. xii 12-31; Eph. ii 14-22; iv 5; 1 Cor. i 10.

² Catholicity. Luke xxiv 47; Mark xvi 20; Acts i 8; ix 15; Rom. ix 18; Col. i 8-23.

¹ For all the Fathers hold the doctrine thus expressed by St Hilary of Poitiers on Ps. cxxi n. 5. "The Church is one body, not mixed up by a confusion of bodies, nor by each of these being united in an indiscriminate heap and shapeless bundle; but we are all one by the unity of faith, by the society of charity, by concord of works and will, by the one gift of the sacramentum in all." No notion of the Church's unity in England, it may be remarked, outside of Catholicism, goes beyond "the indiscriminate heap and shapeless bundle."

² Tit. ii 11.

³ Rom. i 25.

⁴ Tit. ii 14, with 1 Pet. ii 25.

⁵ John xvii 17.

⁶ Eph. iv 4.

⁷ John xvii 21.

⁸ Gal. v 19, 20.

⁹ 1 Cor. xiv 33.

¹⁰ Eph. v 27.

¹¹ Matt. xvi 18.

against which not even the gates of hell shall prevail. It was to be wisely ordered as the house of God,¹ in which² all hear his voice, who is set over as the ruler,³ and has received his brethren to be confirmed,⁴ and the care⁵ of the whole flock. It was to be endued⁶ with virtue from on high, and strengthened by the Spirit of truth⁷ who proceeds from the Father; possessing the power of authoritative⁸ teaching, which if any hear⁹ not, nor obey, they are to be accounted as heathens and publicans, by a judgement which binds both in heaven and on earth. Are there any who do not see that in this description, which sets forth the Church's pre-ordained end, its proper character and very lineaments, the Primacy itself is included, and exhibited as the principal cause which effects the unity of the whole body? I hardly think that any such can be, so apparent is the bond which ties these several parts together.

Yet perhaps this may be more vividly brought out if we shortly mention the common opinions among Protestants on the Church's unity. For, omitting those who hold an invisible¹⁰ Church, and so expunge visible unity from its attributes, all the other opinions may be reduced to three:

A. Anglicans, whose belief has been set forth, besides

¹ 1 Tim. iii 15. ² Matt. xviii 17. ³ Luke xxii 26.

⁴ Luke xxii 31, 32. ⁵ John xxi 15. ⁶ Acts i 4-8.

⁷ John xv 26. ⁸ Matt. xxviii 20. ⁹ Matt. xviii 18.

¹⁰ The first Reformers fell into this grievous error because they had no other way to defend their schism. They may be passed over at present, as in most even of the Protestant confessions visibility is reckoned among the notes of the Church.

Pearson on the Creed, with more than usual care by Dodwell (in his Treatise on the Bishop as the Principle of Unity, and St Peter's Primacy among the Apostles as the Exemplar of Unity), begin by noting that the question of visible unity cannot be determined in the same way as it respects the universal Church, or each particular Church. But why? Because, they say, it was indeed the will of Christ that each particular Church should have a double unity, inward and outward, but it was not his will that the whole Church, the sum of these particular Churches, should have the same mark and test. Because it was his will that both unities should characterize the particular Churches, to use a school phrase, separately and distributively, but not the whole body and the sum of these taken collectively. Whence they conclude that bishops were chosen and made, by the command of Christ, to preside over particular Churches, and be in them the source and principle of external unity, but that a Primate was not chosen to whom the whole Church should be subject, and on whom its external unity should depend.

At this argument one is lost in astonishment, how it could have suggested itself to learned men, and gained their assent. For what had they to prove, or how could they assure themselves, or others, as to either of these two points, that external unity was necessary to particular Churches but not to the whole Church, or that the institution of bishops presiding over particular Churches came from Christ, yet not that of the Primate, whose charge was to rule, administer, and maintain in unity the whole Church? Had they texts wherein to trust? But as often as the Bible speaks of the Church's unity, it means that Church which is called "the kingdom of God," "the kingdom of Christ," and "the kingdom of heaven," which is termed "the inheritance of the Gentiles," and embraces with a mother's bosom and a mother's love the whole race of man from one end of the earth to the other. Had they creeds to cite? But in these unity is attributed to that Church only, which is so termed absolutely, and very often has the epithet of Catholic.

Moreover, is the word Church, in its unrestricted application, of doubtful meaning? On the contrary, it is specially defined as well in the Holy Scriptures,¹ where it expresses of itself the whole society of believers, as in the Fathers, such as Irenæus,² Tertullian,³ Clement⁴ of Alexandria, Origen,⁵ Hilary,⁶ Jerome,⁷ and all the rest without exception, who, in using it, express the whole Christian people joined in one sole communion. It is defined also by Councils, as in the Canons of Laodicea,⁸ Carthage,⁹ and Constantinople,¹⁰ where the Church means the whole assembly of orthodox believers, as distinct from heretics and schismatics. It is defined in the most ancient ex-

¹ 1 Cor. vi 4; x 32; xi 22; xii 28; Eph. i 22; iii 10-21; v 23, 24, 25, 27, 29, 32; Col. i 18-24; 1 Tim. iii 15.

² Irenæus, lib. 1, c. 3; lib. 3, c. 4.

³ Tertullian, de Præsc., c. 4.

⁴ Clement, Stromat., lib. 7, 17.

⁵ Origen in Cantic. Hom. 3.

⁶ Hilary, de Trin., lib. 7, c. 12.

⁷ Jerome, adv. Lucifer.

⁸ Concil. Laodic., Can. 9, 10.

⁹ Concil. Carthag. 4, Can. 71.

¹⁰ Concil. Constant. 2, Act 3.

planation of the creeds, the unanimous meaning of which Tertullian seems to have rendered in saying: "And, therefore, so many and so great Churches are that first one from the Apostles, whence all come So all are first, and all Apostolical, while all set forth one unity, while they have interchange of peace, the appellation of brotherhood and the common rights of friendship, privileges regulated by no other principle than the tradition of the same sacramentum."¹ Lastly, the very heretics² defined this term, who, in order to make themselves understood, could use the word Church in no other sense than to express the universal assembly of the faithful.

After this it is not at all necessary to ask Anglicans afresh if they have ancient Fathers whose authority they can quote. What these thought and believed about the Church's unity is fully shown by those whom we have quoted, and by the words of Irenæus, "The Church, though dispersed throughout the whole world, yet, as if it were contained in the same house, carefully preserves the rule of faith, and holds it as if she had one soul and one heart, nay, and teaches it with one consent, as if she spoke with one voice. For although different tongues occupy the world, yet, the force of tradition is one and the same, nor do the Churches of Germany, Spain, Gaul, the East, Egypt, Libya, and the middle of the world embrace any other faith. But as there is one and the same sun shining over the whole world, so the preaching of the truth shines everywhere and enlightens all men who desire its knowledge.”¹

¹ De Præsc., c. 20.

² See in the sixth act of the second Nicene Council the quotations from the iconoclast synod of Constantinople.

What, then, was the motive of Anglicans in maintaining the unity of particular Churches, and the institution of bishops cohering with it, to be necessary, while they denied the necessity of unity in the Church universal, or of a Primate’s institution, to effect universal unity? What induced them to assert incompatibilities, and defend them as a matter of life and death? The evidence of the Scriptures, and the unquestionable belief of all Christian antiquity, extorted from them the acknowledgement that unity was a mark of the Church, and the ascription to Christ of the institution of bishops as necessary for the forming and maintaining unity. But the fixed purpose of defending their schism, and their determination to reject the Primacy, urged them to deny that unity in the whole Church was ordered and provided for by Christ. The result of these affirmatives and negatives was a doctrinal² monster of incomparable ugliness, an outrage on the light both of nature and of revelation, as incapable of defence as abhorrent from reason and from grace.

B. The second Protestant opinion has been set forth at length by Vitringa,³ and supported with all his ingenuity. It is that of those who distinguish a twofold unity of the Church, one interior, spiritual, proceeding from union with one and the same invisible Head, Jesus Christ, and completed and perfected by the inhabitation of the Holy Spirit and the bestowal of heavenly gifts; the other exterior, visible, depending on profession of the same faith, participation of the same sacraments, obedience to the same superiors. Having made this distinction, they proceed to argue for the purpose of proving that while the former unity is universal and absolutely necessary, the latter is neither universal nor necessary, save hypothetically (of which hypothesis Vitringa nowhere explains the nature), and so is capable both of extension and restriction. In a word, they attach simple and absolute necessity and universality to the spiritual and invisible unity, but by no means to the external and visible.

¹ Adv. Hæreses, lib. 1, c. 3.

² Even the Puritan Cartwright observed, “If it be necessary to the unity of the Church that an Archbishop should preside over other Bishops, why not on the same principle should one Archbishop preside over the whole Church of God?”—Defence of Whitgift.

³ Sacred Observations, lib. 5, c. 7, on the hypothetical external communion of Christians.

But for this what are their authorities? Can they allege the most ancient Fathers in unbroken succession from the Apostles? Nay, they candidly confess that the Fathers thought external and visible unity simply and absolutely necessary, and not those only of the fourth and fifth centuries, but those of the second and third. Witness Vitringa,¹ who says, "If we consult on this point the doctors of the ancient Christian Church, they seem on all hands to have embraced the view that the communion of believers in holy rites, in the supper of the Lord, and in reciprocal offices of brotherly love, was maintained absolutely, not hypo-

¹ See also the testimony of Mosheim, quoted above, p. 216, note.

thetically. They supposed, and seem to have persuaded themselves, that all who were joined to the Christian Church by the due rite of baptism after previous preparation, were really regenerated by the grace of the Holy Spirit, and so that the Christian Church was an assembly of men, who in far greater part, saving hypocrites of whom a few might exist in secret, participated in the renewing and sanctifying grace of the Holy Spirit. Accordingly, to be joined to the Church was much the same as being joined to the heavenly city; to have one's name on the Church's books, much the same as to have it in God's book of life. On the other hand, to be severed from Church communion, or, to use Tertullian's words, 'to be deprived of the sacrament of the Body and Blood of the Lord, and to be debarred from all brotherly communion,' was to risk salvation, and incur the danger of eternal death. That is, they supposed that no one was saved out of the external communion of the Church, which they confounded with the mystical and spiritual communion of the saints. And again, kindred points to these and resting on the same principle, that Bishops represent the office and person of Jesus Christ himself in the Christian Church; that those who separated themselves from them when rightly and duly elected, separated themselves at the same time from the communion of Christ himself; that those who were absolved by the bishops after penance publicly performed according to the canons of ecclesiastical discipline, restored to their rank, and honoured with the kiss of peace, were absolved in the heavenly court by God himself and Christ the Judge. Lastly, which was the most *audacious*¹ of all such hypotheses, that it was all over with the salvation of all who separated themselves in schism from the external communion of the Church and its rites, although hitherto they had neither been tainted with heresy, nor involved in crimes destructive of the Christian² profession. It would be easy for me to support at length each one of these particulars by the sentiments and the discipline of the doctors of the primitive Church, were they unknown to the more instructed, or did my purpose allow it. I now only appeal to Cyprian's letter to Magnus, in the whole of which he supposes and urges the very hypotheses which I have been enumerating; and amongst the rest, speaking of Novatian's schism, he writes thus distinctly: 'But if there is one Church which is beloved by Christ, and alone is cleansed in his laver, how can he who is not in the Church,' (that is, in communion with that particular external assembly which makes a part of the external Catholic Church) 'be loved by Christ, or washed and cleansed in his laver? Wherefore as the Church alone possesses the water of life, and the power of baptizing and washing a man, let him who asserts that any one can be baptized and sanctified with Novatian, first show and teach that Novatian is in the Church, or presides over the Church.¹ For the Church is one, which, being one, cannot be at once within and without. For if it is with Novatian, it was not with Cornelius. But if it was with Cornelius, who succeeded the Bishop Fabian in regular order, and whom the Lord hath glorified with martyrdom over and above the rank of his high priesthood, Novatian is not in the Church.’² It is the precise thing which we have been stating.”

¹ Thus the universal belief of the Fathers from the beginning is charged with audacity. It is difficult not to be struck with the utter antagonism of feeling which separates Protestants from the whole body of the Fathers. The statements here ascribed, and truly, by Vitranga to them, would be viewed in modern English society as the very insanity of bigotry.

² Because to rend Christ's mystical body, and to subvert that unity for which He had prayed the Father, was regarded by them as a crime of the deepest dye. In modern England it would be consecrated by the vainglorious plea of "civil and religious liberty."

But where did Vitranga and the supporters of his doctrine get courage to contradict the whole line of Fathers and their unbroken tradition? You would surely expect from them decisive arguments, and expressions from Holy Writ distinctly laying down no other than a hypothetical necessity of visible and external unity. But you may search in vain all over the Gospels, the Epistles, and the Acts, for any such. Not only is there no mention in them of such a distinction as that invisible unity is absolutely necessary, while external and visible unity is but hypothetically so; but this latter is plainly enjoined and set forth as the note which the mystical body of Christ, the true Church, cannot be without; and its violation is reckoned among those works of the flesh which exclude from the kingdom of God.

¹ The unrestricted expression, “to preside over the Church,” used by Cyprian of Novatian, who claimed to be Peter’s successor, contains a clear indication that the fold entrusted to Peter was as wide as the Church itself. It is the same Church in the two clauses, but in the former it must be understood universally.

² Ep. 69.

How, besides, can that be deemed necessary only under hypothesis, without holding and faithfully maintaining which you cut yourself off from the very fountain of blessing, and transgress and subvert the order appointed by God for attaining salvation? Such an assertion would be senseless. Yet in most of the Protestant professions—the Helvetic, art. xiv, the Gallican, art. xvi, the Scotch, art. xxvii, the Belgian, art. xxviii, the Saxon, art. xii, the Bohemian, art. viii, and that of the Remonstrants, art. xxii—it is laid down as an indisputable principle, “That the heirs of eternal life are only to be found in the assembly of those called.” What, then, do those who violate outward and visible unity, and withdraw from the outward and visible body of the Church? They stop up the very way which Providence has opened for their obtaining “the inheritance of sons.”

For indeed Christ is the Saviour of his mystical body the Church,¹ which therefore he purchased with his own blood, enriched with promises,² provided with all manner of graces, and most nobly dowered with truth, charity, and the Holy Spirit,³ to give her at last salvation, and “the weight of eternal glory.”⁴ But have these things reference to a visible or an invisible Church? To a Church one and coherent, or rent and torn by factions? It is the Church which Christ founded, which he made to be “the light of the world,”⁵

¹ Eph. v 23-25.

² Eph. iv 15-17.

³ John xiv 16-26; xv 26; xvi 7.

⁴ 2 Cor. iv 17.

⁵ Matt. v 14.

bound together by manifold¹ external links, ordered to be one with the unity of a house, a family, a city, a kingdom; with that unity wherewith the Father and the Son are one. In it he placed² pastor and doctors to bind and to loose, and to watch over the agreement of all the parts; and he committed to Peter the charge to rule and to feed. Such, then, as fall off from one single visible Church are of the condition of those whom the Apostles of the Lord foretold, that “in the last time there should come mockers, walking according to their own desires in ungodliness: these are they who separate themselves, sensual men, having not the Spirit”:³ these tear themselves from their Saviour, lose the fruit purchased by his blood, and fall from the inheritance which the Head obtained for his body and his members.

Therefore the necessity of union with the one single visible Church is as great as the necessity of union with Christ the Head, as the necessity of the remission of sins, “for outside of it they are not remitted: for this Church has specially received the Holy Spirit in earnest, without whom no sins are remitted.”⁴ It is as great as the necessity of charity, “for it is this very

¹ Compare Luke xii 8, 9, with Matt. x 32; Mark viii 38; Rom. x 10; and again, Mark xvi 15, with Matt. xxviii 19; Acts ii 41; viii 36; xix 5; 1 Cor. xii 13; and Matt. xxvi 28, with Luke xxii 19; 1 Cor. x 17; xi 21; and Eph. iv 11, with Acts xx 28; Tit. i 5.

² Compare Eph. iv 11-16, with 1 Cor. xii 13-31; and Matt. xviii 18, with John xx 21; Acts xv 41; xvi 4; 2 Cor. x 6; 1 Tim. v 20; Tit. i 93; ii 15.

³ Jude 18; 2 Pet. iii, 2, 3.

⁴ Augustin. in Enchirid., c. 63.

charity which those who are cut off from the communion of the Catholic Church do not possess,"¹ whence "whatsoever thing heretics and schismatics receive, the charity which covers a multitude of sins is the gift of Catholic unity and peace."² It is as great, in short, as the necessity not to involve oneself "in a horrible crime and sacrilege,"³ "in the greatest of evils,"⁴ one "by which Christ's passion is rendered of no effect, and his body is rent."⁵ Thus⁶ the sin is committed of which Christ said, "It shall not be forgiven, neither in this world nor in the world to come," and one is estranged "from the sole Catholic Church, which retains the true worship, in which is the fountain of truth, the home of faith, the temple of God, into which if any one enter not, or from which if any one go out, he loses the hope of life and eternal salvation."⁷ Can any necessity be greater, or less conditional than this? Or what can be more plain than this statement of the simple and absolute necessity of visible unity and outward communion?

Where, then, are we to find the cause which induced so many learned and able Protestants first to imagine this distinction between the necessity of internal and external communion and unity, and then to deceive themselves and others with such a mockery? The

¹ Aug. in Tract. de Symb., c. 11.

² Aug. de Baptismo, cont. Donat., lib. 3, c. 16.

³ Aug. Cont. Litt. Petiliani, lib. 1, c. 21-22; lib. 22, c. 13-23; lib. 3, c. 52.

⁴ Optat., lib. 1.

⁵ Ambros. de Obitu Satyri Fratris, lib. 1, n. 47.

⁶ Idem de Pœnit., lib. 2, 4.

⁷ Lactant. Div. Instit., lib. 3, c. 30.

real cause was, as I believe, that having denied the institution of the Primacy, and the authority lodged in it for the purpose of forming and maintaining unity, they were without a criterion or proof in virtue of which, among so many Christian societies divided from and condemning each other, they could safely choose the one with which they were to be joined in communion, and the outward unity of duty and obedience. For they would readily conclude that the unity so often commended in Scripture, and so earnestly enjoined, could not be external, since God, who does not command impossibilities, had instituted no visible sign to mark that company of Christians, which alone among all the rest was the continuation and development of the Church founded by Christ, and built up by the Apostles.

C. From the same source must the third Protestant doctrine on unity be derived. Jurien¹ filled up the sketch of this, which Casaubon,² Claude,³ and Mestrezat⁴ had drawn, and it became so popular as not only to infect a large number of Protestants, but to exert a withering influence on certain unstable members of the Catholic body. It teaches that we must believe not only in an internal and spiritual, but in a visible and external unity, for the Scriptures plainly urge its necessity, and Christian tradition fully describes it, so that there is not a truth more patent or established on greater authority. This unity, however, is restricted

¹ Le vrai Système de l'Eglise.

² Answer to Cardinal Perron.

³ Défense de la Réforme, p. 200.

⁴ Traité de l'Eglise, p. 286.

within narrow bounds, and confined to the articles called fundamental, though as to how many these are no one defender of the system is agreed with another. For it is sufficient for Christians not to differ in the profession of such articles for them to be deemed members of one and the same Church. Whence they infer that one and the same true Church is made up out of almost all Christian societies, the Roman, the Greek, the Nestorian, the Eutychian, the Waldensian, the Lutheran, the Anglican, and the Calvinist; for their differences, important as they are, offer no hindrance to the unity which Christ enjoined, the Apostles preached, the creeds express, and universal tradition demands.

As Bossuet,¹ the brothers Walemburg,² Nicole,³ and even some Protestants have most fully dealt with this portentous opinion, there is no need to urge much against it here. I prefer repeating the question, What occasion had the Protestants to get up so unheard-of a paradox, and a system so absurd? It was twofold: one theoretical, and the other practical.

The theoretical was this. The crime of heresy, depicted in Scripture and Christian antiquity with colours so dark, had gradually lost its foulness and its magnitude in the minds of Protestants, who had, at length, come to the pass of reckoning religious, as well as civil, liberty, among the unquestionable rights of man. As if, all other human acts being subject to a law, those alone which proceed from the intellect are exempt:

¹ Bossuet, writings against Jurien.

² The brothers Walemburg, Treatise on Necessary and Fundamental Articles.

³ Nicole, de l'Unité de l'Eglise.

as if the difference between right and wrong, which embraces the whole range of man's life, did not relate to its noblest part, in the acts of the intellect and the reason: as if God had laid down a law of justice, charity, fortitude, and prudence, but entirely omitted a *law*¹ of faith: as if the will submitted to a law of good, but the mind owned no law of truth; or as if God cared for the boughs and leaves, but took no thought of the root.² But what could Protestants do? Having allowed to all full licence of thought, and overthrown the authority which ruled the mind, they were forced, while they kept the name of heresy, to give up the thing meant by it, and the effects springing from that thing. They were forced to attenuate to the utmost the crime of heresy. and to reduce to the smallest possible number articles necessary to be believed by all; they were forced to extend beyond all measure the Church's limits, while they contracted beyond all measure the range of necessary unity.

Besides the theoretical, there was a practical occasion in those schisms which, not merely in later or in mediæval times, but in the first ages also, rent the Christian society. Jurien and Pfaff appeal to these, pretentiously enumerating those which arose under Popes Victor, Cornelius, Stephen, Urban VI, and Clement VII, and those named from Donatus, Meletius, and Acacius. Then they ask if the true Church of Christ can be thought to consist in one single society perfectly at union with itself. They allege many conjectures against this, but dwell on the argument that in defect of a visible external test, such an assertion could not be maintained without imposing upon all a most intolerable burden of searching out where the true doctrine is and the legitimate ministerial succession: for it is not until these are found, that one single society will be recognized, with which, as the only true Church, unity of communion is to be kept.

¹ See the recognition of this law, Mark xvi 16; Matt. xxvii 18-20; Luke xii 8, 9; Rom. x 10.

² Such the Fathers call Faith, terming it, "the beginning and foundation," "the greatest mother of virtues," "the principle of salvation," "the prelude of immortality," "the clear eye of divine knowledge," "the fountain of all wisdom." See Suicer, art. πίστις.

Now, I confess that I do not see how this argument can be met, if the institution of the Primacy, and its proper function to form and maintain unity, be rejected. For, without this, by what visible token among so many Christian societies, divided by intestine dissension, and condemning each other, can you distinguish the one which has the character of the true Church and the right to exact communion with itself? There is none to be found; and so, either all hopes of finding the true Church must be relinquished, or an inquiry must be undertaken into purity of doctrine and legitimate ministerial succession, on the termination of which the only true Church will at last be found. But as this latter course is to by far the greater number of men impossible, dangerous¹ to all without exception, and most foreign to the Christian temper, the only conclusion remaining is, that the selection of a Primacy with the power of effecting unity impressed upon it is most intimately involved and bound up in the visibility and unity of the true Church.

¹ After having gone through the search for ten long years, I may be allowed to express how great its danger, and how great, too, the blessedness of those who are not exposed to it. It is worth the experience of half a life to receive the truth, without personal inquiry, from a competent authority. Protestantism begins its existence by casting away one of the greatest blessings which man can have.

And quite as closely is it bound up with that other test of the Church, its Catholicism. We are not to believe Voss and King,¹ in their assertion that this test began to be applied first in the fourth century, for the purpose of distinguishing the genuine company of the orthodox, and the true body of Christ, from heretics and schismatics. For we find the Church distinguished by the epithet of Catholic, not merely in the records of the fourth² and fifth³ century, but in those of the third,⁴ and the second,⁵ at the beginning of which St Ignatius wrote, "Follow all of you the Bishop, as Jesus Christ the Father; and the body of Presbyters, as Apostles. But reverence deacons, as the command of Christ. Without the Bishop let nothing of what concerns the Church be done by any one. Let that be deemed a proper Eucharist which is under the

¹ De Symbolo, Diss. 1, 39, and Hist. Symb. Apostol., cap. 6, 16.

² Pacian, Ep. 1, n. 4. Cyril of Jerusalem, Catech. 18, n. 23. Eusebius in Isa. xxxii 18. Chrysostom in Col., hom. 1, n. 2; in 1 Cor., hom. 32, n. 1. Jerome in Matt. xxiv 26.

³ Augustine in Ps. xli, n. 7; Epist. 49, n. 3-52, n. 1, and elsewhere.

⁴ Council of Antioch, quoted by Euseb. Hist., lib. 7, c. 30. Origen in Rom., lib. 8, n. 1; Cyprian, Epist. 52; Acts of St Fructuosus, n. 3, and of St Pionius, n. 9.

⁵ Irenæus, lib. 3, c. 17, and Epistle on Martyrdom of St Polycarp, n. 19.

Bishop, or with his sanction. Where the Bishop is, there also let the multitude be; as, where Christ Jesus is, there is the Catholic Church."¹ As, therefore, that cannot be the Church of Christ, which is not Catholic, we ought to investigate the meaning which is given to this word by the consent of all orthodox believers.

Now, two points are signified in it, one of which is its material, the other its formal, or essential, part. Its material part is, that the geographical extension of the true Church be such that its mass be *morally*² universal, absolutely great, and eminently visible, but comparatively with all heretical and schismatical sects larger and more numerous. Of this material meaning attached to the epithet Catholic, we find abundant witnesses in all³ the orthodox writers who defended the cause of the Church against the Donatists, and again, against the Luciferians⁴ and Novatians; and likewise, in those who have explained the creeds,⁵ and, as occasion offered, have touched on the force of the term Catholic.⁶ But the same first-cited witnesses tell us that universal diffusion is not sufficient, and that we require another element to infuse a soul into this universally extended body, and to bring it to unity.

For two properties are continually recurring in

¹ Epist. to Smyrneans, n. 8.

² Augustine, Ep. 52, n. 1, Serm. 238, n. 3.

³ As Optatus, lib. 2, Aug. de Unitate Ecc., c. 2, etc.; cont. Cresconium, l. 2, c. 63. Contr. Petilian, 12-55, 58-73; in Ps. xxi 47, 147, and in 1 Ep. John Tract. 1, 2.

⁴ Pacian, Ep. 3, Jerome cont. Luciferianos.

⁵ Cyril of Jerusalem, Cat. 18.

⁶ Irenæus, lib. 1, c. 10; lib. 4, c. 19. Tertullian adv. Judæos, c. 7. Bernard in Cantica, serm. 65.

Christian records, one of which may be called negative, the other affirmative. The force of the former is to expel from the circle of the one true Catholic Church all sects of heretics and schismatics; of the latter, that this Church consist in one single communion and society, whose members cohere together by hierarchical subordination.

But is it true that both these points are so plainly and constantly inculcated? To remove all doubt we will quote the authors who most distinctly assert the one and the other. As to the first, there are Clement of Alexandria,¹ Tertullian,² Alexander of Alexandria,³ Celestine,⁴ Leander,⁵ the Emperor Justinian;⁶ then again the Councils of Nice,⁷ Sardica,⁸ and the third of Carthage;⁹ nay, the heretics¹⁰ themselves; and all these agree in asserting that there is one only ancient Catholic Church, outside of which the divine patience endures and bears with heresies, which are as thorns. Thus in language ecclesiastical and Christian nothing can be considered as more certainly proved than that the epithet of Catholic is distinctive, and shows the communion which rejects from its bosom all heresies and

¹ Clement, Stromat., l. 7, §§ 15-17.

² Tertullian de Præsc. c. 30.

³ Alexander, apud Theodoret, H. E., lib. 1, c. 4.

⁴ Cœlestinus, Homil. in laud. eccles.

⁵ Leander, Cont. Origenistas in Actis Synodi V.

⁶ Justinianus, Epist. ad Mennam Constantinopolitanum.

⁷ Council of Nice, in the Creed, and Canon 8.

⁸ Sardica, in letter to all Bishops, quoted by Athanasius, Apol. 2.

⁹ 22nd Canon of Codex Africanus.

¹⁰ The Nestorian profession of faith, in fifth act of Council of Ephesus.

all schisms. It was with great reason, therefore, that Pacian¹ wrote what Cyril of Jerusalem² and Augustine very frequently repeated, "Our people is divided from the heretical name by this appellation, that it is called Catholic."³

Moreover, this unity, which we have said may be called negative, is necessary indeed to the understanding of the Church as Catholic, but is by no means sufficient to complete the idea of Catholicity. To it therefore must be added the affirmative unity, by which Catholicism is not only divided from heretics and schismatics, but becomes in itself a coherent body with members and articulations. That which we so often read in the monuments of antiquity, about the necessity⁴ of communion among the members of the Church and the tokens⁵ and means of that communion, has reference to the assertion and maintenance of this unity, which is the soul of Catholicity, and without which it cannot even be conceived. There are very distinct and innumerable testimonies about it in the ancient Fathers,⁶ declaring its necessity and setting forth its mode of composition and coherence.

¹ Pacian, Ep. 1.

² Cyril, Catech. 18.

³ Aug. de Vera Relig., c. 6; de Utilit. Credendi, c. 7.

⁴ Pacian, Ep. 3, "The Church is a full and solid body, diffused already through the whole world. As a city, I say, whose parts are in unity. Not as you Novatians, an insolent particle, or a gathered wen, separated from the rest of the body."

⁵ Such as are γράμματα κοινωνικά, Euseb., H. E., lib. 7, c. 30; ἐπιστολαὶ κοινωνικαί, Basil, Ep. 190, or κανωνικαί, Ep. 224, letters of peace commendatory, ecclesiastical, etc.

⁶ See especially Chrys. Hom. 30 on 1 Cor.

For to set forth the mode of this is the plain drift of what Irenæus¹ writes in confutation of heretics by the tradition of the Apostolical Churches: “ For since it would be very long in the compass of our present work to enumerate the successions of all the Churches, taking that Church which is the greatest, the most ancient, and well known to all, founded and established at Rome by the two most glorious Apostles Peter and Paul, by indicating that tradition which it has from the Apostles, and the faith which it announces to men, which has reached even to us by the succession of Bishops, we confound all those, who, in whatsoever manner, either through self-pleasing, or vainglory, or blindness and evil intention, gather² otherwise than they ought. For to this Church on account of its superior principate, it is necessary that every Church should come together³—that is, the faithful who are everywhere—for in this Church the tradition which is from the Apostles has been ever preserved by those who are everywhere. . . . By this ordination and succession, the tradition and preaching of the truth, which is from the Apostles in the Church, has reached down to us. And this proof is most complete, that it is one and the same vivifying faith, which has been preserved and handed down in truth in the Church from the Apostles to the present day.”

¹ Irenæus, lib. 3, c. 3.

² Compare Jerome’s often-quoted passage, Ep. 15, to Pope Damasus, “ Whoso gathereth not with thee, scattereth; that is, whoso is not of Christ is of Antichrist.”

³ For the meaning of “ come together,” see further on, c. 40. “ God hath placed in the Church Apostles, Prophets, Doctors, and all the rest of the operation of the Spirit, of which all those are not partakers who do not run together to the Church, but defraud themselves of life by an evil intention and a very bad conduct. For where the Church is, there is the Spirit; and where is the Spirit of God, there is the Church and all grace.”

The Churches, therefore, which are everywhere diffused, derive that strength and harmony of parts, out of which the whole body of the Catholic Church is made up, from the fact of their agreeing in the unity of faith and preaching with that Church of Peter, which is the greatest, the chief, and the more powerful. It follows that the Primacy of Peter, and the authority inherent in it to effect unity, is that principle which Christ selected; that the Church which he had set up might be Catholic, and bear the note of Catholicity on its brow.

And Cyprian would set forth the same mode of communion, when he speaks of the coherence of Bishops, by which both the Catholic episcopate is made one, and the Church one and Catholic. For as the several communities draw the unity of the body from the unity of the prelates to whom they are subject, so all prelates, and the communities subject to them, constitute one Catholic episcopate and one Catholic Church, because they cohere with the principal Church, the root and matrix, which is the Church of Peter, upon whom the Lord founded the whole building, and whom he instituted to be the fountain and source of Catholic unity.¹

¹ See St Cyprian's letters, 69, 55, 45, 70, 73, 40. Consider the force of the words, "Peter, upon whom the Church had been built by the 'Lord, speaking once for all, and answering with the voice of the Church, says, Lord, to whom shall we

These words are a clue to understand Tertullian's¹ meaning, when, already become a Montanist, he called the Catholic Church, whose discipline he was attacking, the Church near to Peter—"concerning your opinion I now inquire, whence you claim this right to the Church. If because the Lord said to Peter, 'Upon this rock I will build my Church,' 'to thee will I give the keys of the kingdom of heaven,' or 'whatsoever thou shalt bind or loose on earth, shall be bound or loosed in heaven,' you, therefore, pretend that the power of binding and loosing is derived to you—that is, to all the Church near to Peter—how do you overthrow and change the manifest intention of the Lord in conferring this on Peter personally,² 'Upon thee I will build my Church,' and 'I will give to thee the go?" (Ep. 55), on which Fénelon (de sum. Pontif. auct., c. 12) remarks, "What wonder, then, if Pope Hormisdas and other ancient Fathers say, 'the Roman, that is, the Catholic Church,' since Peter was wont to answer with the voice of the Church? What wonder if the body of the Church speaks by the mouth of its head?"

¹ De Pudicitia, c. 21.

² This Montanist corruption (into which Ambrose on Ps. xxxviii, n. 37, and Pacian in his three letters to Sempronius, state that the Novatians also fell) induced some Fathers, and especially Augustine (Enarrat. in Ps. cviii, n. 1, Tract. 118 in Joan., n. 4, and last Tract., n. 7), to teach that the keys were bestowed on Peter so far forth as he represented the person of the Church in right of his Primacy. By which mode of speaking they meant this one thing, that the power of the keys, as being necessary to the Church, and instituted for her good, began indeed in Peter, and was communicated to him in a peculiar manner, but by no means dropped, or could possibly drop, with him.

keys,' not to the Church, and, whatsoever thou bindest or loosest,' not what they bind or loose?" Now, he used this mode of speaking because it was customary with Catholics, who are wont to exhibit nearness with Peter as the characteristic of the Church, and the necessary condition for sharing that power, whose plenitude and native source Christ had lodged in Peter.

This certain and undoubting judgement of Catholics Tertullian himself, before his error, had clearly expressed in his book, De Scorpiace, c. x, where he says, "For if you yet think heaven shut, remember that the Lord here (Matt. xvi 19) left its keys to Peter, and through him to the Church."

Nearness, then, with Peter, and *consanguinity of doctrine*¹ thence proceeding, are no less necessary to the Church, that it may be the Catholic Church which Christ founded and built upon Peter, than that it be partaker in those gifts which, again, he himself granted only to unity, as it is effected in Peter and by Peter.

Now, not only the most ancient Fathers, as Irenæus, Tertullian, and Cyprian, but the whole body of them, assign the origin of this to Peter. This they make the vivifying principle of agreement, society, and unity, without which the Church can neither be intrinsically Catholic, nor the mind conceive it as such. It is so stated by Pacian,² Ambrose,³ the Fathers⁴ of Aquileia,

¹ Tertull. de Præsc., c. 32.

² Pacian, ad Sempronium, Epist. 3, § 11.

³ Ambrose, de Pœnit., lib. 1, c. 7, n. 33.

⁴ Synodical Epistle, among the letters of Ambrose.

Optatus,¹ Gregory Nazianzen,² Jerome,³ Augustine,⁴ Gelasius,⁵ Hormisdas,⁶ Agatho,⁷ Maximus Martyr,⁸ and, to shorten the list, by Leo the Great.⁹ It is in setting forth the unity of the Catholic episcopate that he writes what ought never to be forgotten by Christian minds: "For the compactness of our unity cannot remain firm, unless the bond of charity weld us into an inseparable whole, because, as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. For it is the connection of the whole body which makes one soundness and one beauty; and this connection, as it requires unanimity in the whole body, so especially demands concord among bishops. For though these have a like dignity, yet have they not an equal jurisdiction; since even among the most blessed Apostles, as there was a likeness of honour, so was there a certain distinction of power, and the election of all being equal, pre-eminence over the rest was given to one, from

¹ Optatus, de Schism. Donat, lib. 2, c. 2, and lib. 7, c. 3.

² Gregory, de Vita sua, tom. 2, p. 9.

³ Jerome, adv. Jovin., lib. 1, n. 14.

⁴ Augustine, in Ps. Cont. partem Donati, cont. Epist. Fundam., c. 4, de Utilitate Credendi, c. 17, and Epist. 43.

⁵ Gelasius, Epist. 14.

⁶ Hormisdas, Mansi, tom. 8, 451, in the conditions on which he readmitted the Patriarch of Constantinople and the Eastern Bishops to communion.

⁷ Agatho, in a letter to the sixth council, read and accepted at its fourth sitting.

⁸ Maximus, Bibl., Patr., tom. 2, p. 76.

⁹ Leo, Epist. 10, c. 1.

which mould, or type, the distinction also between bishops has arisen. It was provided by a great ordering, that all should not claim to themselves all things, but that in every province there should be one whose sentence should be considered the first among his brethren; and others, again, seated in the greater cities, should undertake a larger care, through whom the direction of the universal Church should converge to the one See of Peter, and nothing anywhere disagree from its head."

And, if I do not deceive myself, the direct drift of all this is to answer the question, whether the doctrine of Peter's Primacy, and its virtue as the constituent of unity and Catholicity, is contained in the most solemn standard of faith, the creed. For although there are unimpeachable testimonies to prove that the creeds were not published and explained to catechumens, in order to convey to them a full and complete Christian instruction; and though it be proved further to have been the purpose of the Church's ancient teachers to omit many points in the creeds which were to be set before the initiated at a more suitable season afterwards, it may nevertheless be said that the most commonly received articles of the creeds may be regarded as so many most faithful germs, from which the remaining doctrines would spontaneously spring. And so, to keep within our present point, what is more plain than that the sum of doctrine, concerning Peter's Primacy, contained in the Bible, illustrated by the Fathers, and defined by Councils, is involved in that article of the creed in which we profess that the Church is one and Catholic? No doubt there nowhere occurs in the creeds, expressed in so many words, mention of Peter, or of the Primacy bestowed on him, or of hierarchical subordination; yet it is most distinctly stated that the Church is one and Catholic. What meaning, then, were the faithful to give to those epithets? What were they to intend in the words, I believe one Catholic Church? What but the meaning of the words themselves which they received from the Church's teachers together with the creeds? Now they could not form the conception of one Church and that Catholic, without thinking likewise of one Catholic principle of the Church; nor could they assign the dignity of that one Catholic principle to any other but Peter, whom alone they had invariably been taught to have been set over all. For what St Bernard¹ wrote in mediæval times, "For this purpose the solicitude of all Churches rests on that one Apostolic See, that all may be united under it and in it, and it may be careful in behalf of all to preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," must be considered nothing else than a repetition of the faith which resounded through the whole world, from the very beginning of the Christian religion.

Unless, therefore, any can be found who prefer asserting either that true believers never understood what they believed, in professing the Church to be one and Catholic, or that they understood this otherwise than it had been universally and constantly explained by the Church's teachers, it must be admitted that faith in Peter's Primacy, and in the power bestowed upon it for the purpose of making the visible kingdom of Christ one and Catholic, is coeval with that profession of the creeds which sets forth the Church as one and as Catholic.¹

¹ Ep. 358, to Pope Celestine.

¹ The above chapter is translated from Passaglia, pp. 298-336.

CHAPTER IX

PETRUS DE PETRA

THE question whether the Roman Primacy be of divine right or not is the hinge upon which all turns. This precedence or prerogative of Rome was shown at the First General Council of Nicæa in 325. To whatever extent it reached, and notwithstanding the famous twenty-eighth canon of Chalcedon, it certainly was not either claimed or granted, especially in the West, merely because Rome was the imperial city. It was explicitly claimed by the Bishop of Rome himself, and as freely conceded by others to him, as in a special sense successor of St Peter. From the earliest times that the Church comes before us as an organized body, the germ at least of this pre-eminence is observable. From the very first the Roman Pontiff seems possessed himself, as from a living tradition which had thoroughly penetrated the local Roman Church, with a consciousness of some peculiar influence he was to exercise on the whole Church. This consciousness does not show itself here and there in the line of Roman Pontiffs, but one and all, whatever their individual characters might be, seem to have imbibed it from the atmosphere which they breathed. St Victor and St Stephen, St Innocent, St Leo the Great, and St Gregory are quite of one mind here. That they were the successors of St Peter, who himself sat and ruled and spoke in their person, was as strongly felt and as consistently declared by those Pontiffs who preceded the time of Constantine, and who had continually to pay with their blood the price of that high pre-eminence, as by those who followed the conversion of the empire, when the honour of their post was not accompanied by so much danger. I am speaking now, be it remembered, of the feeling which possessed them. The feeling of their brother bishops concerning them may have been less definite, as was natural; but, at least, even those who were most inclined to dispute the Pope's authority fully admitted that they sat in the See of Peter, and ordinarily treated them with the greatest deference.

Going on rather more than a hundred years, we come to St Leo the Great. His long and able Pontificate shows forth what the legitimate power of the Roman See was, and how it tended to the preservation and unity of the whole Church. He lived at an important crisis, when the barbarous tribes of the North were about to burst over the empire and the Church; the system of which, had it not been consolidated by himself, his immediate predecessors and successors, might have been dissolved and broken up into fragments. St Leo had no slight sense of his own duty and dignity among his brother bishops. His words on one particular occasion may be quoted: “. . . Out of the whole world Peter alone is chosen to preside over the calling of all the Gentiles, and over all the Apostles, and the collected Fathers of the Church: so that though there be among the people of God many priests and many shepherds, yet Peter rules all by personal commission whom Christ also rules by sovereign power. Beloved, it is a great and wonderful participation of his own power which the divine condescendence gave to this man: and if he willed that other rulers should enjoy aught together with him, yet never did he give, save through him, what he denied not to others. . . .

“Wherefore it is said to most blessed Peter, ‘I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven. . . .’ So then in Peter the strength of all is protected, and the help of divine grace is so ordered, that the stability, which through Christ is given to Peter, through Peter is conveyed to the Apostles.

“Since, therefore, beloved, we see such a protection divinely granted to us, reasonably and justly do we rejoice in the merits and dignity of our Chief, giving thanks to the Eternal King, our Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ, for having given so great a power to him whom he made chief of the whole Church, that if anything, even in our time, by us be rightly done and rightly ordered, it is to be ascribed to his working, to his guidance, unto whom it was said, ‘And thou, when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren;’ and to whom the Lord after his resurrection, in answer to the triple profession of eternal love, thrice said with mystical intent, ‘Feed my sheep.’ And this, beyond a doubt, the faithful shepherd does even now, and fulfils the charge of his Lord, strengthening us with his exhortations, and not ceasing to pray for us, that we may be overcome with no temptation. But if, as we must believe, he everywhere discharges this affectionate guardianship to all the people of God, how much more will he condescend to grant his help unto us his children, among whom, on the sacred couch of his blessed repose, he resteth in the same flesh in which he ruled. To him, therefore, let us ascribe this anniversary day of us his servant, and this festival, by whose advocacy we have been thought worthy to share his seat itself, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ helping us in all things, who liveth and reigneth with God the Father and the Holy Spirit for ever and ever.”

A Pontiff so deeply and religiously impressed with the prerogative of St Peter's successor was likely to be energetic in discharging his duties. In truth, we behold St Leo set on a watch-tower, and directing his gaze over the whole Church: over his own West more especially, but over the East too, if need be. He can judge Alexandria, Antioch, and Constantinople, as well as Eugubium, and is as ready, too, wherever canons are broken, ancient customs disregarded, encroachments attempted, where bishops are neglectful or metropolitans tyrannical, where heresy is imputed to patriarchs—in short, wherever a stone in the whole sacred building is being loosened, or threatens to fall, there is he at hand to repair and restore, to warn, to protect, and to punish.

Now, how did his own contemporaries receive it? Did they protest that he was assuming a power never given to his see? Did they declare that in terming himself the special successor of St Peter, who lived and reigned in his see, he was introducing a new and unknown idea? The Œcumenical Council of Chalcedon did not think so. It was composed of all the great prelates of the East, the Roman legates, who presided in the name of the Pope, being the only Westerns present. The Fathers of Chalcedon, then, call the Pope specially the successor of St Peter, and, as such, the maintainer of the deposit of doctrine descending from Christ and their leader (ἀρχηγός) unto good. “ Our mouth was filled with laughter and our tongue with joy; grace has fitted this prophecy to us, by whom the restoration of piety has been accomplished. For what can be higher matter of concern for joy than the Faith, or motive for brighter pleasure than the knowledge of the Lord, which the Saviour himself delivered unto us from above for our salvation, when he said ‘ Go ye, and make disciples all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you ’? This knowledge descending to us like a golden chain from the command of him who established it, thou hast kept throughout, being set forth to all men as the interpreter of the voice of the blessed Peter, and drawing upon all the blessing of his faith. Whence we also, enjoying the advantage of thee as our leader unto good, have exhibited the inheritance of the truth to the children of the Church, not teaching each by himself in a corner, but making known the confession of the Faith with one Spirit, with one accord and agreement.”

Speaking of themselves as assembled in Œcumenical Council, they say the Pope presided over them, as the Head over the members: “ For if, where two or three are gathered together in his name, there he said he would be in the midst of them, how intimately showed he himself to five hundred and twenty priests, who preferred the declaration of their confession in him before both their country and their toil? They speak of the Pope as the one to whom the guardianship of his vine was entrusted by the Saviour; saying of Dioscorus, the deposed Archbishop of Alexandria, that he, “besides all this, turned his madness even against the very one entrusted by the Saviour with the guardianship of the vine, thy Holiness we mean.” They term themselves the Holy Father’s children. “We have judged well-timed the confirmation of this honour to it” (the rank of the second see to the Church of Constantinople), “by the Œcumenical Council, and have ratified it with confidence, as if it had been begun by thy Holiness, who art ever ready to cherish them: being aware that every success of the children is reckoned to the parents who own them.”

“We therefore entreat that you would honour our decision with your suffrage likewise: as we have introduced agreement with the head (τῆ κεφαλῇ) in good things, so let your Highness (ἡ κορυφῇ τοῖς παισὶν) fulfil to your children what is fitting.” Lastly, they leave to him the confirmation of their acts: “We have left the whole force of the acts to you, that you may approve of us, confirming, and assenting to, what we have done.”

He who rejects the Primacy of the Pope, with this letter of the Council of Chalcedon before him, must be prepared to give up the witness of antiquity, and to reject the authority of the Catholic Church.

Let us first take particular expressions of early Fathers, and then give a general summary of them. Thus Clement, the disciple of St Peter and St Paul, enforces the words of the latter: "Why do we raise a sedition against our own body," that body being the body of Christ, because "there is one God and one Christ and one Spirit of grace poured out upon us?" So St Hermas sees the Church militant in a tower built upon Christ's rock, so evenly jointed together that it seemed to be wrought out of one stone, for which especially its Builder rejoiced over it. And Irenæus, who almost touches St John through his teacher Polycarp, says, that as the natural light is sphered in the sun, so the light of divine truth in the Church; that the Church is the storehouse of truth; that where the Church is, there is the Spirit of God; and where the Spirit of God is, there is the Church and all grace; but the Spirit is truth; that the Church is the seven-branched candlestick, bearing Christ's light; that as the sun revolves in its orbit, so there is one tradition of the truth, which the Church presents to the world. Thus richly does Irenæus unfold the thought of Ignatius of Antioch, the contemporary of Apostles, "where Jesus Christ is there is the Catholic Church;" and that as Christ is the mind (γνώμη) of the Father, so the bishops throughout the world are the mind of Christ; and "haste together then all as to the Temple of God, as to one altar, as to one Jesus Christ;" and "as many as come to the unity of the Church, these also shall be of God." And that other thought of another disciple of Apostles:¹ "This is he who is from the beginning, who appeared as one now, who was found (in time), and is ever being freshly born in the hearts of saints, through whom the Church receives her treasure, and grace expanding is multiplied in the saints; so that the grace of the Church exults, which grace not grieving, you will learn what the Word utters."

¹ The author of the letter to Diognetus.

Human languages are different, says the same Irenæus, but everywhere throughout the earth, as in one home of faith, "the power of the tradition is one and the same;" and Tertullian echoes from Africa, "No other principle rules these rights than the one tradition of the same sacramentum;" and Cyprian takes up his master's words: "This sacramentum of unity, this bond of concord, inseparably cohering together, is shown in the robe of our Lord, possessed unbroken and undivided;" whence Augustine and Leo carry it on, and describe "the firm framework of our unity; and so all of them express that great tower of St Hermas, rising from the rock, as built of one stone. "The Church," says Clement, from Alexandria, "is one alone in her foundation, in her idea, in her origin, in her excellence: she is one because the Godhead is one, and because the Holy Trinity is one." "She is," says Origen, "the body of Christ, animated by the Son of God, as the soul quickens and moves the human body." "She is the fortified, impregnable city," repeats Eusebius of Cesarea, Hilary, Theodoret, Augustine, from Palestine, Gaul, the Far East, and Africa, because Christ is her founder and inhabitant, which Alexander of Alexandria expresses in almost the same form: "She is for ever indestructible, though the whole world should choose to war with her, and bears away the victory over every most impious insurrection of heretics, because the Master of the House is the ground of her confidence"—that is, being "the House of God" (1 Tim. iv 15), the Master of the House is always in her. "She is," says Athanasius, "the manhood of Christ, in him having domination and royal power after his crucifixion, and anointed to be his kingdom." Irenæus, Athanasius, and Jerome, all call her the Sun; Irenæus, as moving in one orbit unswervingly, enlightening all the earth; Athanasius, as the faithful witness in heaven, lasting for ever; Jerome, as drying up all the streamlets of error with her single light and heat. No image can more strongly than this represent her unity, universality, and perpetuity, and again her prerogative to be the fountain of grace and truth, as God's creature, in whom is the Word made Flesh. "She is," says Gregory of Nazianzen, "the great inheritance of Christ," thus using Augustine's favourite expression against the Donatists; and he adds, "the fruitfulness of the Tree that fills the world," which is St Augustine's Vine; and St Cyril of Jerusalem specially notes that, "while the kings of the different nations have territorial limits to their power, the Holy Catholic Church alone has a power throughout the whole world which has no territorial limit."

Now, passing from single expressions of particular Fathers, let us see what they all agree in. It may be thus summed up. As there is one only Christ, so there is one only Church; as the Church is one, because Christ is one, so it is one Body, because he has taken a Body; it is therefore the work of his Incarnation, and to dissolve this Body is to dissolve Christ; for as Christ cannot be divided, so neither the Church; the Church, as his Body, is the receptacle of his truth and grace. As the Holy Spirit dwelt in Christ upon earth, so he dwells in the permanent order of the Church's ministry, the perpetual existence of which, in the unity of his Body, is the safeguard against error. Through this ministry, as the joints and ligaments of this one Body, the life of Christ descends from the Head to the members, and Christ's life is Truth and Grace. Thus the Holy Ghost dwells in the Church permanently, as in a home, as in a shrine, as in the Body of Christ, as the marriage-ring with which she is espoused as his Bride; but the same Spirit dwells in particular men only as members of the Body, and so long as they continue to be members of it; as dwellers in the House, and so long as they continue to dwell in it; as worshippers in the Shrine, and so long as they continue to worship in it. By virtue of this union with Christ, as of the Body with the Head, the Church possesses the great function of receiving, teaching, unfolding, and preserving the Truth, and of communicating the Grace by which the Truth is held; and the mode of this union is the indwelling of the Holy Ghost in her as the Spirit of the Head. Thus, belief in our Lord and his Incarnation is blest and fused throughout with belief in the unity, truth, grace, and stability of the Church: the Head and the Body stand together.

Having, on the one hand, this vast amount of positive proof, from sources so various, in behalf of Peter's Primacy, so that without it the whole Christian history of eighteen centuries, in all its manifold blendings with secular history, becomes unintelligible, a tangle which it is impossible to arrange; when we come on the other hand, to consider what its opponents allege as positive argument on their own side, we find nothing. They content themselves with objections to this or that detached point, with historical difficulties, and obscurations of the full proof, such, for instance, as the conduct of St Cyprian in one controversy, the occasional resistance of a metropolitan, the secular instinct of an imperial government stirring up Eastern bishops to revolt, and fostering an Erastian spirit in the Church, the ambition of thoroughly bad men, such as Acacius or Photius, and the like. But what we may fairly ask of opponents, and what we never find the most distant approach to in them is, if, as they say, St Peter's Primacy be not legitimate and instituted by Christ for the government of the Church, what counter-system have they, which they can prove by ancient documents, and whereby they can solve the manifold facts of history? In all their arguments against the Primacy they are so absolutely negative that the grand result, if they were successful, would be to reduce the Church to a heap of ruins, to show that she, who is entrusted with the authoritative teaching of the world, has no internal coherence either of government or doctrine—in fact, no message from God to deliver, and no power to enforce it when delivered. In the arguments of Greeks and Anglicans, Lutherans and Calvinists, and all the Protestant sects, the gates of hell have long ago prevailed against the Church, and the devil has built up at his ease a city of confusion on the rock which Christ chose for her foundation. If we listen to them, never has victory been more complete than that of the Evil One over the Son of God: the promised unity he has scattered to the winds; the doctrine of truth he has utterly corrupted; the charity wherewith Christians loved one another he has turned into gall and wormwood. That is, the opponents of St Peter's Primacy are one and all simply destructive; they inspire despair, and are the pioneers of infidelity, but are utterly powerless to build up. Ask the Anglican what is the source of spiritual jurisdiction, and the bond of the episcopate which he affects to defend? He makes no reply. All he can say is, it is not St Peter. Ask the Greek, if bishops and patriarch disagree, and come to opposite judgements on the faith, or to schisms in communion, which party make the Church? He has no solution to offer, save that it is not the party which sides with St Peter's successor. Ask the pure Protestant, who maintains the sole authority of the written word, if you disagree about the meaning of Scripture in points which you admit to touch salvation, who is to determine what is the true meaning of the word of God? He has nothing to reply, save that he is sure it is not the Pope. Contrast, then, on the one side, a complete coherent system, fully delineated and set forth in the Bible, attested by the Fathers, corroborated by analogy, and harmonizing the history of eighteen hundred years in its infinitely numerous relations, with, on the other side, a mere heap of objections and denials, with shreds of truths held without cohesion, with analogy violated, history thrown into hopeless confusion, and, to crown the whole, Holy Scripture incessantly appealed to, yet its plainest declarations recklessly disregarded, and its most consoling promises utterly evacuated. Choose upon this, between within and without.

St Paul¹ taught us to listen to witnesses, and Christendom, whether assembled in council, or everywhere diffused, was content to depend on them. Most clear is what is said on this point about the Fathers at Nicæa² and Ephesus,³ and no less so the words of Leontius of Byzantium⁴ John Cassian,⁵ Theodoret,⁶ Augustine,⁷ Jerome,⁸ Epiphanius,⁹ Basil,¹⁰ Origen,¹¹ Tertullian,¹² Clement of Alexandria,¹³ and the oldest of all, Irenæus.¹⁴ “The true knowledge,” he says, “is the doctrine of the Apostles, and the ancient state of the Church in the whole world, and the character of the body of Christ, according to the succession of bishops, by which they handed down the Church, which is in every place, which hath reached even to us, being guarded without fiction, with a most full interpretation of the Scriptures, admitting neither addition nor subtraction, and the reading without falsification, and legitimate and diligent exposition according to the Scriptures, without danger, and without blasphemy,

¹ 2 Tim. ii 2.

² See Athanas. de decretis Nic. Synodi, and also Hist. tripartit., lib. 2, 3.

³ See Vincent of Lerins, Commonit., c. 32, 33.

⁴ Leontius, contr. Nestorium, lib. 1.

⁵ Cassian, de Incarn., lib. 1.

⁶ Theodoret, in the three dialogues.

⁷ Augustine, cont. Cresconium, 1, c. 32, 33.

⁸ Jerome, Ep. 126, and Dialog. adv. Luciferianos.

⁹ Epiphanius, Hæres. 61, 75, 78.

¹⁰ Basil, cont. Eunomium, lib. 1; de Spiritu S., c. 29.

¹¹ Origen in Matt. Tract. 29.

¹² Tertullian, throughout the book De Prescriptionibus.

¹³ Clement, Stromatum, lib. 7.

¹⁴ Irenæus, lib. 4, c. 63 and 45.

and the chief gift of charity, which is more precious than knowledge, more glorious than prophecy, more eminent than all graces." For, as he says elsewhere, "We ought to learn the truth, where the gifts of the Lord are placed; among whom is that succession of the Church, which is from the Apostles, sound and irreproachable conversation, and discourse unadulterated and incorrupt. For these maintain that faith of ours in one God, who made all things: these increase that love towards the Son of God, who has made for our sake so great dispositions: these explain to us the Scriptures without peril."

And, besides, where is the Protestant who does not praise the Hebrew illustrations of Lightfoot, Schoettgen, and Meuschen? or who does not at least make much of the commentaries of Aben Ezra, Kimchi, Jarchi, and others, in the interpretation of the Hebrew Scriptures? They all see the advantage of approaching such sources of information, and using them for their own purpose. But are we to refuse to the Fathers and ancient doctors of the Church the deference which we allow to Rabbins and Talmudists? This is at least a reason for hearing the testimony of the Fathers.

And if it be concordant, constant, and universal, it most powerfully recommends that scriptural interpretation which agrees with it. In this, all Catholics without exception, and the most judicious and learned Protestants, are agreed. In good truth, it would be incredible that an interpretation could be false, which was adopted unanimously by the Fathers of every age and country. And it ought to be as incredible to find any one so conceited as not to be greatly moved by the witness and consent of Christian antiquity.

One point of inquiry remains, whether the Fathers have given their opinion, and that unanimously, on Peter and the texts which relate to him. But their words inserted in the foregoing pages entirely terminate this controversy, and show that they were all of the mind expressed by Gregory the Great, in these words, which, it is well to remember, were directed to the supreme civil authority of those days, for he tells the emperor—

“ To all who know the Gospel, it is manifest that the charge of the whole Church was entrusted by the voice of the Lord to the holy Apostle Peter, Prince of all the Apostles. For to him it is said, ‘ Peter, lovest thou me ? Feed my sheep.’ To him is said, ‘ Behold, Satan hath desired to sift you as wheat, but I have prayed for thee, Peter, that thy faith fail not; and do thou, one day, in turn, confirm thy brethren.’ To him is said, ‘ Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven. And whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth, it shall be bound also in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, it shall be loosed also in heaven.’ ”¹

¹ St Greg. Ep., lib. 5, 20.

INDEX

- ABRAHAM and Peter, parallel between, 26, 29, 30
Acacius, 284
Acacius of Constantinople, 284
Agatho, 70, 270
Alexander, quoted, 264, 291
Alexandrine Apion, allusion to, 152
Ambrose, St: on Luke, 12, 18,
 89, 91; quoted, 70, 257, 281
Ambrosiaster, quoted, 182, 196
Aquileia, Fathers of, 240
Archimandrites of Syria to Pope Hormisdas, 240
Arnobius, quoted, 163
Arnobius, junior, quoted, 240
Athanasius, quoted, 31, 202, 282
Augustine, St, quoted, 17, 31,
 81, 122, 200, 256, 299, 270,
 286
Baronius, 187
Basil, St, quoted, 18, 96, 281
Bede the Venerable, quoted, 156
Bernard, St: to Innocent II,
 67; de Con., 240; in Cant., 263, 272
Boanerges, name of, 12
Bossuet: Serm., 84, 88, 114;
 against Jurien, 259
Cartright, on Whitgift, 250
Casaubon, quoted, 258
Cassian, John, his testimony,
 124, 286
Cassiodorus, quoted, 185
Celestine, Pope, referred to, 272
Chrysologus, St Peter, quoted,
 17
Chrysostom, St, quoted, 10, 11, 16, 31, 40, 42, 69, 90, 97, 128,
 133, 135, 140, 143, 158, 164,
 170, 179, 182, 186, 193, 265
Claude, quoted, 258
Clement of Alexandria, St: his testimony, 279; Strom., 281, 286
Cœlestinus, Hom., 264
Council of Antioch, 282 of Chalcedon, 19, 33, 277, 278 of Carthage, 248, 279; Nicene, 249, 264, 274
 of Constantinople, 248
Councils, Œcumenical, quoted, 248
Cyprian: Ep., 17, 22, 51, 62,
 68, 112, 150, 195, 207,
 262, 291; de Unit. Eccl., 218, 253, 242, 275
Cyril of Alexandria, St, 10, 129
Cyril of Jerusalem, quoted, 69,
 201, 265, 282
Dante, Inferno quoted, 221
Dionysius, quoted, 128
Dodwell, 247
Donatists, mentioned, 263
Ephrem, Patriarch of Antioch,
 274
Ephrem, Syrus, St., quoted, 69, 219
Epiphanius, 17, 157, 286
Eucherius of Lyons, quoted, 201
Eusebius, quoted, 162, 281
Euthalius, quoted, 134
Fénelon, quoted, 268
Gallican Sacramentary, 17
Gelasius, quoted, 270
Greek Fathers, comparison, 194
Gregory the Great: Pope St, 274, 288

- Gregory of Nazianzen, quoted, 17, 201, 242, 270
 Gregory of Nyssa, 185, 282
 Gregory II, Pope, to Leo the Isaurian, 126
- Hermas, St, 280
 Hilary of Poitiers, on Matt., 17, 201, 248, 281
 Hippolytus, quoted, 200
 Hormisdas, Pope, 270
- Ignatius of Antioch, 220, 280
 Innocent, Pope St, 122, 274
 Irenæus, quoted, 185, 200, 220, 248, 262, 266, 280, 281, 286
 Isidore, St, Bishop of Seville, 125
- Jerome, St: Dialog., quoted, 51, 150, 168, 185, 193, 243, 248, 262, 286; to Pope Damasus, 266
 Jurien, quoted, 260
- King, quoted, 262
- Lactantius, 257
 Lateran Synod, 63
 Leander, quoted, 264
 Leo, St, quoted, 17, 68, 91, 123, 187, 274, 277
 Lightfoot, 286, 287
- Martin I, Pope, 63
 Maximus of Turin, 17, 124, 270
 Mestrezat, quoted, 258
 Mosheim, quoted, 220, 257
- Nicole, quoted, 259
 Novatian, mentioned by Cyprrian, 254
- Optatus, St, quoted, 123, 257, 263, 270
 Origen: on Luke, 12; in Ps. i, 17, 19, 41; on John, 97, 248, 269, 286
- Pacian, quoted, 262, 263, 265, 268
 Passaglia, 12, 30, 144, 153, 177
 Pearson, quoted, 247
 Polycarp, St, 280
 Petavius, quoted, 120, 220
 Pfaff, quoted, 260
 Philip, Legate of Holy See, 18
 Photius, mentioned, 284
 Proclus, Patriarch of Constantinople, 240
- Stephen of Dora, 93
 Stephen of Larissa, to Boniface II, 70
 Stephen, Pope St, 274
- Tertullian, quoted, 17, 185, 220, 248, 263, 264, 269, 281, 286
 Theodore, Abbot, to Paschal I, 63
 Theodore, Pope, allusion to, 122
 Theodoret, 10; to St Leo, 168, 179; quoted, 17, 179, 281, 286
 Theophylact, quoted, 58
 Thomas of Canterbury, St, quoted, 184
- Victor, Pope St, 274
 Vincent of Lérins, 286
 Vitringa, Sacred Observations, 250, 254
 Voss, quoted, 262
- Walemburg, the Brothers, 259

Date Due

Mr 7 '48
O 21 '40
AP 20 '41
AP 21 '40
FAULTY
AP 20 '48
FEB 3 '50
JY 27 '50
MT 28 '52
AG 17 '54
SEP 9 '02
SEP 18 '03
OCT 1 8 1996
SEP 18 2004
®

BX1805 .A43
St. Peter, his name and his office

Princeton Theological Seminary-Speer Library

1 1012 00036 5892